

Mayors want GTSB voice based on population

■ From page 8 ■

tion Cousens leads a coalition of mayors who are demanding Leach replace his toothless version of the GTSB with a more powerful 44-seat co-ordinating body.

Every municipality would have a seat but votes would be weighted based on population - the mayor plus one councillor for every 200,000 residents.

Owen said the province is waiting to hear back from Tonks before making any decision on the board's authority of representation.

"Tonks, I think we're expecting him to report to us or the minister in June. But we're not carving into stone the dates and things like that," he said.

"If Tonks needs more time to get (issues on) the minds of the people, we're flexible. We need a better meeting of the minds from the divergence that's out there."

He could not pinpoint when the board will begin.

"It could be any day between July and January, or after January."

According to Owen, many regional politicians fear losing their power if the board is made stronger. Others warn the GTSB will be a white elephant without more authority.

One of the biggest stumbling blocks is representation. Owen said Leach and the public are wary of large boards after watching the new Toronto council in action.
