Yellow, but by no means mellow.

Rarely, in my experience, has a car drawn a crowd quite like the (now available in yellow besides purple) 1999 Plymouth Prowler, the world's first, and as far as I know, only mass-production hot rod.

The Prowler began life as a concept car at the 1993 Detroit Auto Show. It appeared at a time when Chrysler was undergoing massive internal changes made necessary by a rising sea of red ink on the ledgers.

It was termed a calling card at the time and intended to show the kind of fresh thinking car buyers (and the baleful-eyed bankers) could expect in the coming years.

Response from the public, the media, and (notably) Chrysler shareholders surpassed the firm's most sanguine hopes. After deciding if it could be done, and if it should be done, the production approval was almost a foregone conclusion — partly due to demand but also to show the world (and the bankers) Chrysler's audacious new attitude was for real.

The car went into production in June 1997 as a 1998 product and came in any color as long as you liked Prowler Purple, a close cousin of Plum Crazy, a hue used in Chryco's muscle car years.

At a list price of $52,100, it was a relative bargain, and frankly, far less than anyone expected.

There were, and still are, people prepared to pay double that amount for these cars because they look so neat and make a statement everyone can understand.

Plymouth made very clever use of existing parts. The steering wheel and seats come out of the Grand Cherokee. The vents and switch gear can be
