The 1999 328i BMW is less expensive than last year's model

The all-new generation of the BMW 3-Series will be priced at $34,900 for the 323i and $44,900 for the 328i when they go on sale in September as 1999 models.

The cars will initially be offered only in four-door sedan versions. Big news is the inline, six-cylinder 323i will be priced at just $1,600 over its four-cylinder 318i predecessor.

Besides two more cylinders, the engine is all new and produces 168 hp. It comes with a five-speed manual transmission with a five-speed automatic optional.

The new 1999 328i actually drops in price to $44,900 from the 1998 version listed at $47,900.

Options include the Premium and Sport packages now bolstered by an on-board navigational system and new rain-sensing windshield wipers.

Both models of the new 3-Series sedans come with BMW's Head Protection System and front-seat, side-impact airbags. Rear seat airbags are optional.

The car was developed in Munich and at Designworks, BMW's subsidiary in California.

When used and stored properly, antifreeze does not pose a problem for pets.

To avoid pets from ingesting antifreeze, clean up spills immediately

NC - Protecting your pet from the hazards associated with ingesting antifreeze is easy and imperative.

When used and stored safely, and according to instructions, antifreeze does not pose problems for pets.

Here are some ways to protect your pets from harm:

1. When you change your antifreeze, keep your pet on a leash or indoors.

2. Drain old antifreeze into a bucket or container and never drain where pets can get to it.

3. Be sure to clean up any spills thoroughly and immediately.

4. Keep unused antifreeze in original or well-marked containers and keep out of reach of children, who might spill it near pets.

5. Store antifreeze away from where pets or other animals like raccoons can get into it.
