HOME & GARDEN

The largest un-insulated area in most houses is the basement

Cool, crisp days, autumn leaves, the first frost, raking the lawn, football on Sundays - all sure signs that fall is here.

But, as Canadians know all too well, fall won't be here for long. So don't get caught in the cold. It's time to get your home ready for the long, cold winter that's ahead.

"There are lots of easy things homeowners can do to prepare their homes for winter and to save money on energy consumption," said Bob Huggard, vice president of retail services at Consumers Gas.

DON'T LET HEATING COSTS GO THROUGH THE ROOF

Warm air rises. As much as 15 per cent of your home's total heat loss could go through the roof if your attic is not properly sealed and insulated.

If you're going to insulate your attic, Consumers Gas recommends that you:

✓ Caulk and seal any openings where plumbing, wiring and duct work pass through the ceiling to the attic. Use expanding foam to fill large gaps.

✓ Check the level of insulation in your attic. The minimum level should be R-40 to maintain comfort and minimize energy costs. Make sure the first layer of insulation fills the area between the ceiling joists from side-to-side and top-to-bottom.

✓ Check the ventilation. Air must be able to circulate in an unheated attic.

Lack of ventilation restricts air movement, causing moisture build up in winter, which could lead to serious structural damage. So be sure to keep roof vents and eaves clear and unsealed.
