

ENVIRONMENT: Town frustrated by lack of provincial support for saving natural feature.

Saving moraine needs provincial help

The town that still boasts of being "Canada's fastest growing municipality" is looking at a way to stop its part of the Oak Ridges Moraine from disappearing.

But for its plan to save natural "corridors" between important features of the moraine to work, Richmond Hill councillors made clear this week, the town will need provincial money and co-operation from private landowners.

"The town does not have the financial resources to buy those lands," planning commissioner

Janet Babcock said after council decided to make the corridor study public and re-examine it in February.

The town will also ask the province to clarify its vague support for moraine preservation. Babcock said she was frustrated with the study committee's provincial representative, who said the town should preserve a significant moraine corridor — but how that's done is up to the town.

"I've had it," Babcock said.

Since 1994, the province has done nothing with the Oak Ridges Moraine Strategy for the Greater Toronto Area, which offered directions on how the moraine could and should be protected, and yet still gave ample opportunities for development, according to Ron Christie, who chaired the technical working committee that spent years preparing it.

"It was a damn good bit of work," said Christie, current chair of the Rouge Park Alliance. "The government of the day has obviously decided not to pursue it."

For moraine protection to happen, there has to be a provincial initiative to spell out what will be done, he said. "If that doesn't happen, nothing much is going to happen."

Richmond Hill's proposal has already alarmed some local landowners, including Barb Murgatroyd, a resident in the study area for 35 years. "All of a sudden I'm environmentally sensitive," she told council. "I'm terrified."

Moraine resident and developer John Emery later complained about governments arbitrary and high-handed attitude in dealing with private property.

Most councillors spoke of "give and take" with owners and the town's ability to compromise on proposed corridors.

But Councillor Joe Di Paola said the whole plan is a "dream-like scenario" unless landowners volunteer for it.

"Somebody's got to support the interests of people over animals," he said.

Ministry of Natural Resources spokesperson Brian Blomme said he won't comment on the study until the province is approached by the town.

The 1994 moraine strategy, he said, was put aside while the province reviewed municipal planning.

Citizens band together

Grassroots movement grows stronger

A town-wide ratepayers' group, spearheaded by resident Jim Priebe, is now in place.

Armed with the belief that strength in numbers delivers the strongest voice, the group held its inaugural meeting Tuesday.

Group members plan to help each other to deal with planning matters in each ward, such as environmental issues.

"We formed a coalition of ratepayers and residents' associations to address issues of mutual concern and quality of life," co-organizer Mike Watson said.

The group is made up of Pride and Preston Lake, Whitchurch-Stouffville Citizens' Association, Vandorf Residential Association, North Whitchurch-Stouffville Ratepayers' Association, and Friends of Musselman's Lake.

Those attending discussed how they could help each other and their residents, what they have in common, and where to proceed, Watson said.

The coalition will detail goals, its mandate, and a complete mission statement in the near year.

In the meantime, those attending were given the task of taking the umbrella group's concept back to their perspective associations.

"The idea now is to come back with a set of goals and a direction to work from," Watson said.
