HEALTH

Sex abuse manual distributed

The region's health and social services committee will team up with the York Region Abuse Program to develop a resource manual for people affected by sexual abuse.

The committee approved a purchase of service contract with the abuse program, allocating $43,500 to develop and distribute about 20,000 copies of the booklet.

The manual will be distributed to schools and agencies throughout the region.

Pregnant women to get subsidy

Pregnant women who receive Ontario Works subsidies may soon be eligible for an allowance to ensure their nutritional requirements are met.

The region's health and social services committee has approved a pre- and postnatal special nutrition allowance of $33 a month, to replace the pregnancy allowance that was scrapped by the province.

The region will only be required to pick up some of the costs, with the province funding 80 per cent of the tab.

The special allowance is geared to help women meet their increased nutritional needs during pregnancy and lactation to enable them to have healthier babies. Those eligible will begin receiving the allowance in the fourth month of pregnancy and continue up to four months after birth, to a maximum of 10 months. The amount of the allowance will double in the event of a multiple birth.

Service database re-issued

York's social services department's Brown Book could soon be circulating again.

The region's health and social services committee has given the thumbs up to the development of an integrated social and health services database and the immediate re-establishment of the York Region Directory of Community Services (Brown Book).

King Township mayor Margaret Black also requested a card be produced for police to hand out when called to a family crisis situation that will list resource numbers.

The committee heard the social services department has received numerous requests for the book since it stopped publication in 1994.
