THE COURTNEY TREMPE INQUEST

Tougher laws a must

Bylaw officers say the laws controlling unruly dogs need to be made tougher to ensure public safety across the province.

Testifying Friday at an inquest into the death of eight-year-old Courtney Trempe, a Georgina bylaw officer said current laws allow a dog who has seriously bitten someone to remain in its owner's care without restrictions.

The process of the Dog Owner's Liability Act is quite long and allows the dog to remain in the community unrestrained for some time pending the hearing, Andrew Fordham said.

Unless the owner consents to an animal being destroyed immediately, as was the case in the Trempe tragedy, owners can request a court hearing before a justice of the peace to examine whether restrictions should be placed on their dogs freedom.

An order may end in requiring a dog to be muzzled, leashed or contained in a fenced yard.

The dog that killed Courtney had no previous history of biting or viciousness but the inquest is reviewing all laws regulating dog behaviour and public safety.

Fordham suggested bylaw departments should have the right to restrain a dog who has bitten someone without delay. The owner would then have to request a hearing within a certain period of time in order to get the dog back.

But even if restrictions are placed on a dog's freedom, they only apply to the dog's hometown, since each municipality controls its own dog bylaws.

"The public must see the order as valid, no matter where you go in Ontario," Fordham said. "If you go camping in Algonquin Park, the (restricted) dog should be muzzled — the question is how do you get something in place that makes a community safe."

York officials scramble to redraw town boundaries

Local politicians try to head off Tory merger plan

Tory Party insiders say Premier Mike Harris plans to turn York Region into a mega-city immediately following the election, according to some regional politicians.

In an effort to deflect any plans to amalgamate York's nine municipalities, many towns are hiring consultants and setting up committees to find a better way to redraw the York Region map.

Vaughan Regional Councilor Michael DiBiase said Tory officials he has met at party fundraisers have warned him Harris will turn York, Peel, Halton, and Durham regions into four mega-cities if he wins the election, expected in June.

The move would mirror what Harris did with Toronto after the 1995 election.

Markham Deputy Mayor Frank Scarpitti said there are rumours regional amalgamations will be implemented in time for the municipal elections in November 2000.

York Mackenzie MPP Frank Klees insisted his Tory colleagues still plan to let local politicians determine their own fates.

But they won't wait forever.

"We're going to give municipalities an opportunity to do the right thing. Obviously, at the end of the day, if we don't see that the taxpayer is getting efficient value for dollar, then the province may well have to take some unilateral action," Klees said.

In the past few weeks, there has been a flurry of activity at the local level relating to amalgamation.

Aurora set up a committee to investigate merging with Newmarket and King. And Vaughan and Markham have agreed privately to hire consultants to look at expanding their borders.
