REGIONAL AFFAIRS: System being fine-tuned to reduce waiting times

Measures to ease licensing system backlog

BY KATHLEEN GRIFFIN
 Staff Writer

Hiring another 141 road test examiners, extending deadlines and offering weekend tests should help ease a province-wide backlog in the graduated licensing system.

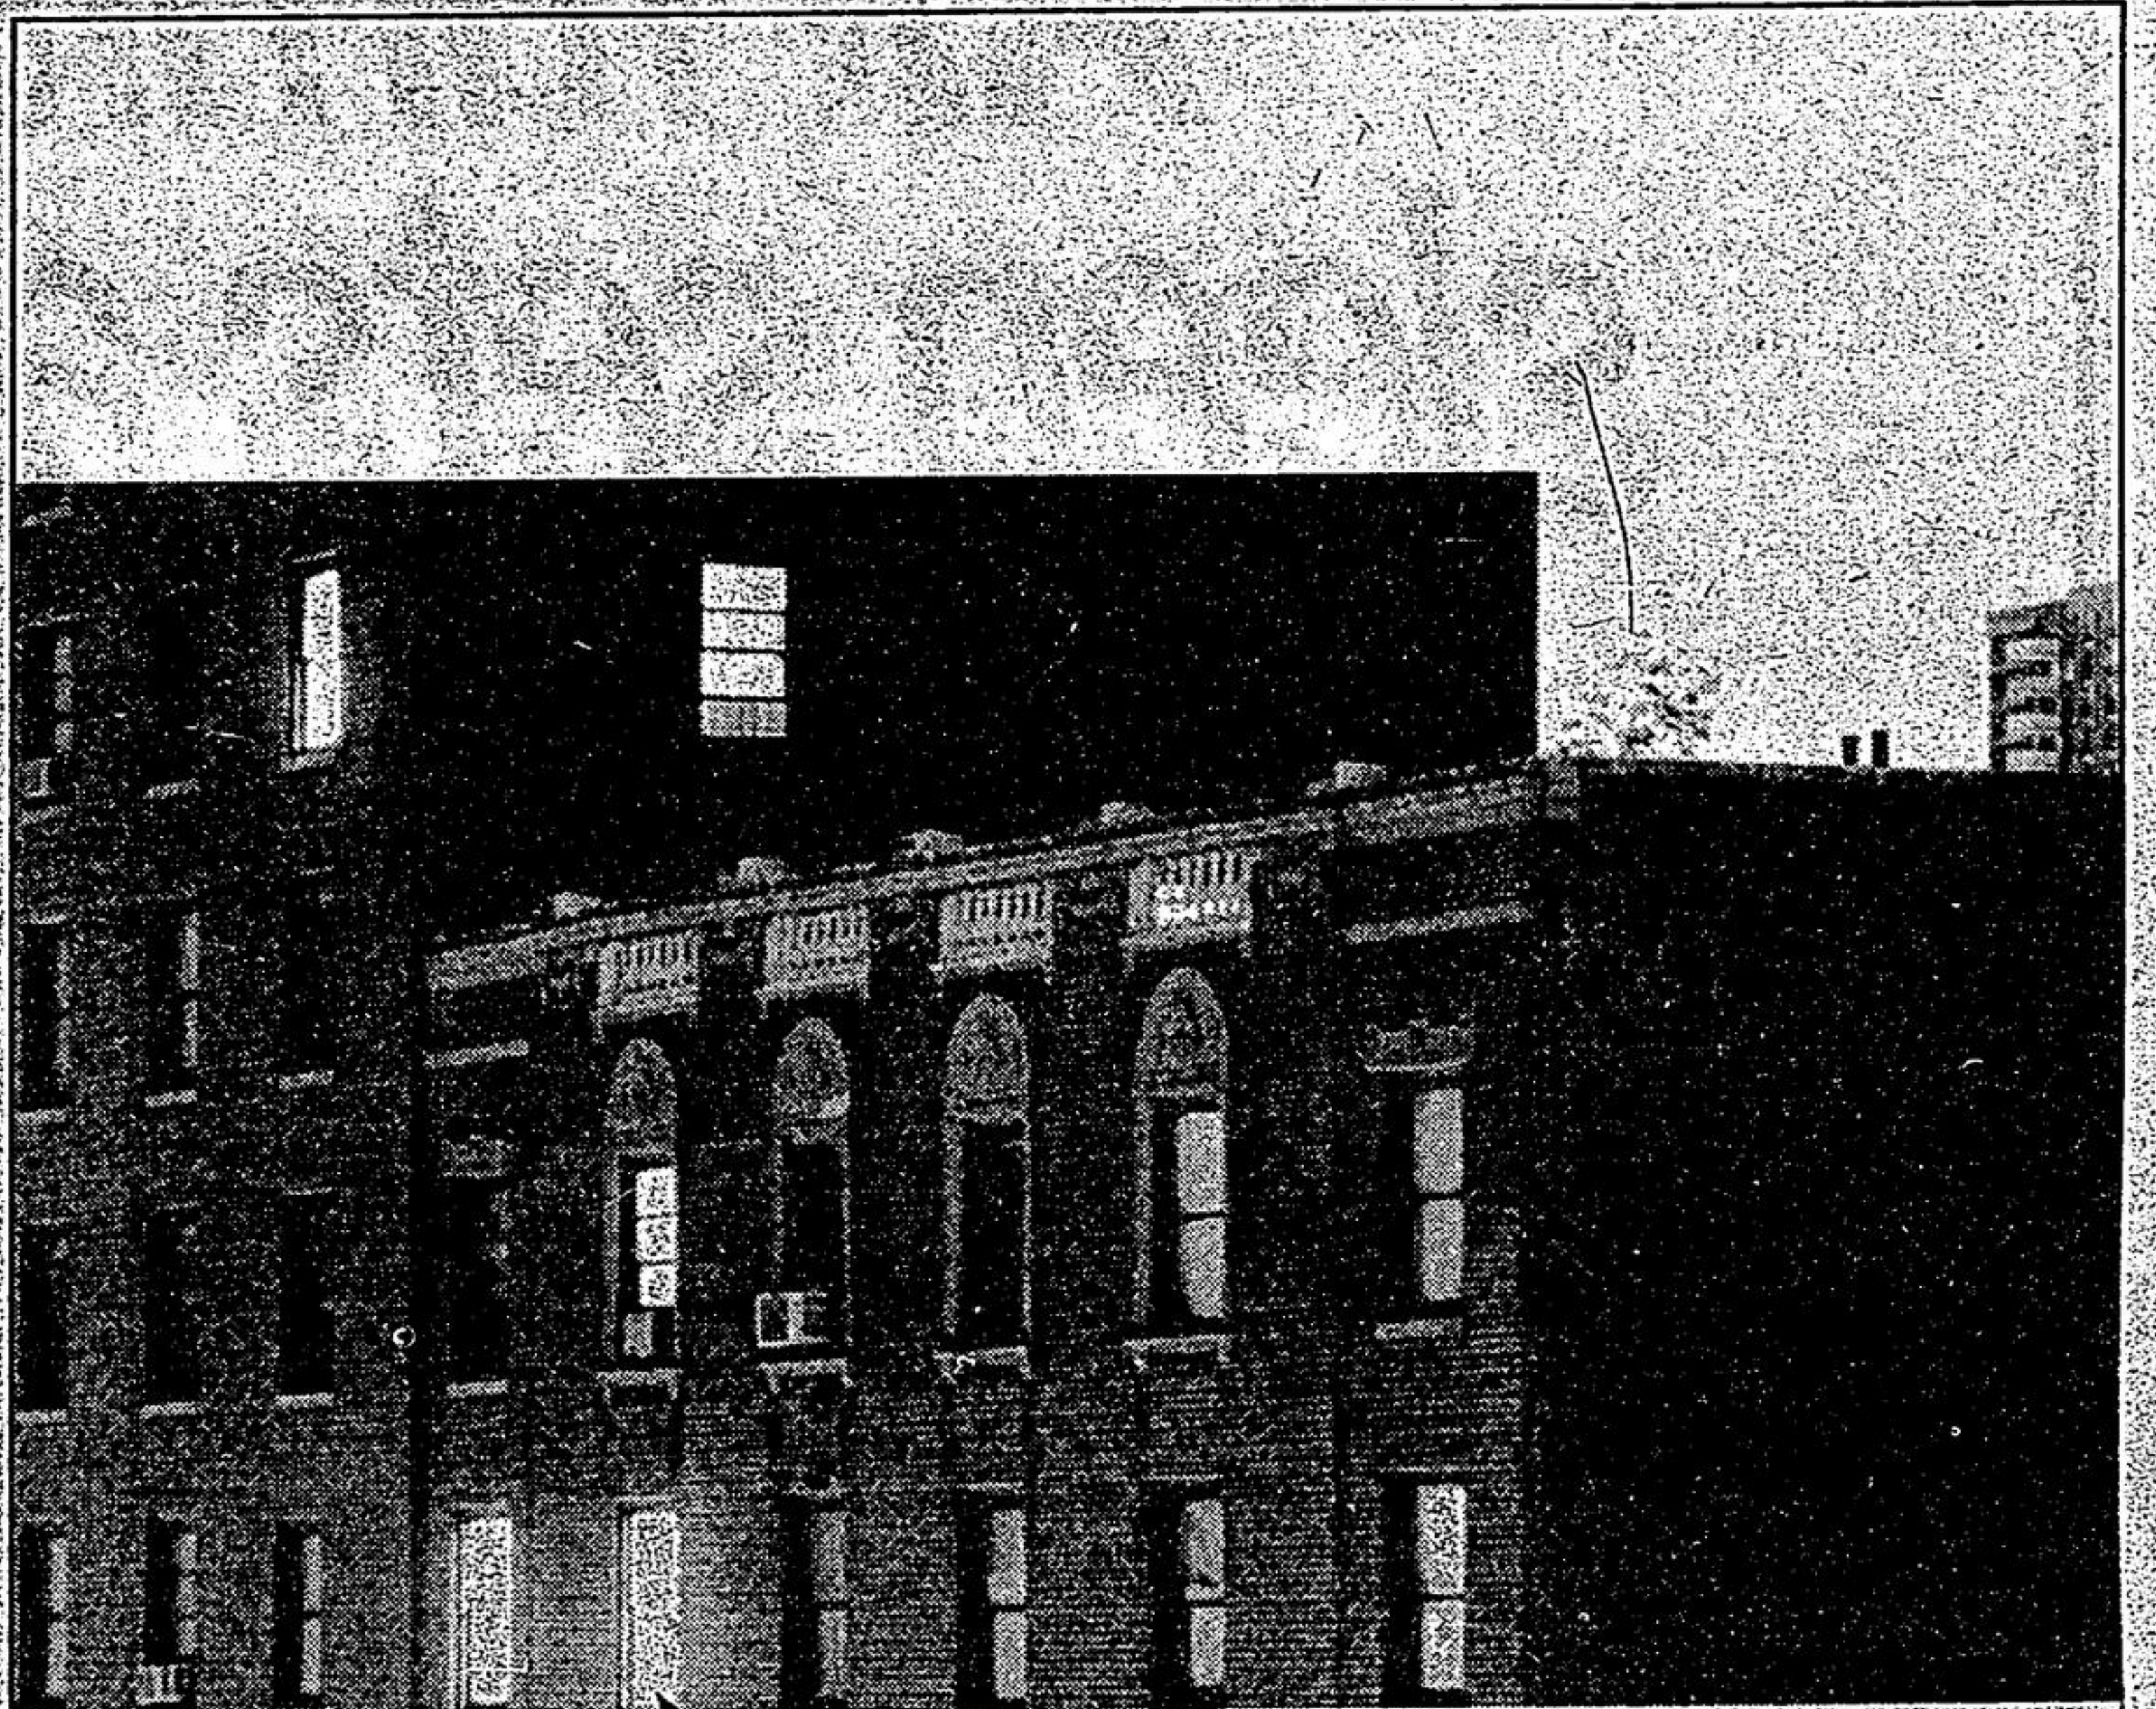

The measures were announced last week by Transportation Minister David Turnbull, almost six months after the crisis last spring when as many as 50 young drivers were forced to camp out each night at the Aurora testing facility, hoping for a stand-by spot.

"Current waiting times are unacceptable and our government is taking action to reduce the backlog," Turnbull said in a province-wide release. "We are fine-tuning our system to improve customer service while achieving our most important goal — improved driver safety, especially for new drivers."

The province is committed to the program, Turnbull said, citing statistics showing the number of collisions among novice drivers has been reduced by 31 per cent and injuries and fatalities are down by 24 per cent since the program was introduced in 1994.

The two-tiered program is aimed at restricting driving privileges, including driving on 400-series highways, until the driver has had at least a year's experience.

When it comes to an impact on our economy, small business is big indeed. In fact, approximately 80% of the almost 550,000 new jobs produced in Ontario during the past four years were created by small business, and even more new jobs will be generated by increasing trade and exports.

The Ontario government has cut personal income tax and payroll tax, and is committed to doing more. We also offer a wide range of programs and services to help small businesses create jobs. To find out more about how Ontario is helping small business grow, visit www.ontario-canada.com.
