

Students invited to celebrate black history

February is when the rich and spirited African heritage is celebrated throughout North America. In York Region, we're giving students a chance to let the community know who they look up to within the black community.

The Economist & Sun/Stouffville Tribune is asking students, from elementary grades to high school, to tell us about their black role model, living or dead.

Celebrating black heritage dates back to 1915 in the United States, and February was chosen as the month to acknowledge the contribution of blacks because it's the birth month of Frederick Douglass, a civil war freedom fighter.

Essays should be no longer than 250 words, and winners will be chosen by our panel of community judges in two categories, elementary and high school.

Great prizes have been lined up for the winning writers.

Submit your essays by Jan. 31 to Black History Month Contest, c/o the Economist & Sun/Tribune, 9 Heritage Rd., Markham, ON, L3P 1M3 or fax to 294-1538.
