An Important Nutrient For All Plants

Charlie Dobbin

Most of us know the 3 main elements in every fertilizer - nitrogen, phosphate and potash - that are represented on every fertilizer package. There are also other nutrients called micronutrients that are essential for healthy plant growth. Iron is one of these. Iron deficiency in plants is characterized by yellowing of the leaves. Iron is necessary for the plant for the formation of chlorophyll, which in turn produces the green colour in the leaves. Yellowing of leaves can also be caused by other factors, but when it is caused by iron deficiency, the problem can be easily rectified by adding it to fertilizers.

as effective as three hundred pounds of iron in other forms. White Rose has studied and experimented with chelated iron for years and arrived at a formula that has proven itself over and over again. All our fertilizers contain chelated iron and these can be easily recognized by the brand name 'Iron Plus'. This fertilizer has been immensely successful on our nursery farm where we grow all our roses, perennials, shrubs and trees. By providing, in every fertilizer application, the means for the plant to have sufficient quantities of iron present at all times, you are ensuring healthy and robust growth.

This is a little known component of fertilizer, but it is often this extra attention to the production of quality fertilizer that makes your lawn and garden well-fed and healthy.

Charlie Dobbin, B.Sc.(Agr), is a recognized horticultural expert from White Rose Home & Garden Centres. Studies have indicated that an application of one-third of an ounce of chelated iron is
