Gardening Tip
Planting of Rose Bushes

1. Prune off any broken or bruised root and branches and soak the roots in water anywhere from an hour to 24 hours before planting.
2. Dig a hole at least twice as wide and deep as the extended root system to allow room for future growth and adequate drainage.
3. Prepare a soil mixture of 2 parts loose top soil to 1 part moss. Place 6" of this mixture in the bottom of the hole and build a cone shaped mound in the hole.
4. Place the plant in the hole, spreading the root system over the cone-shaped mound of soil. The graft or bud union (this is the spot, generally a couple of inches above the roots from which the branches start to grow out of the trunk or stem of the root system) should be about 1" below ground level. Fill the hole 3/4 full of loose soil mixture and tramp the soil with your foot to eliminate air pockets.
5. Soak thoroughly with water and allow time for the water to soak in, then fill the hole to ground level with loose soil mixture again. Firm the soil mixture with your foot. Create a saucer of the soil around the plant to hold water and maintain this saucer for at least 2 months until the plant is established.
6. Trim back all roses to 4" above the ground level, water thoroughly at least once a week depending on soil and weather conditions and fertilize periodically in accordance with the instructions provided by the fertilizer supplier.
