

Golf pros, celebrities swing for a worthy cause

Touring golf pro John Daly gathered a group of friends to shoot a few holes Tuesday at Angus Glen Golf Club in Markham.

They played a little golf, shared a few laughs and, most important, raised some money for a worthy cause.

For the second consecutive year, the 34-year-old touring professional, who is best known for his ability to drive a ball a long way, returned to the public course to host the United Food and Commercial Workers Lean on Me Charity Skins game.

The nine-hole alternate shot event, which attracted three other PGA members and four celebrities, helped raise funds for the Leukemia Research Fund of Canada.

Joining Daly were PGA members Fuzzy Zoeller, Michael Bradley and Ted Tryba. Representing the world of entertainment were Daniel Baldwin, Stephen Baldwin, Dean Stockwell and Thomas Calabra.

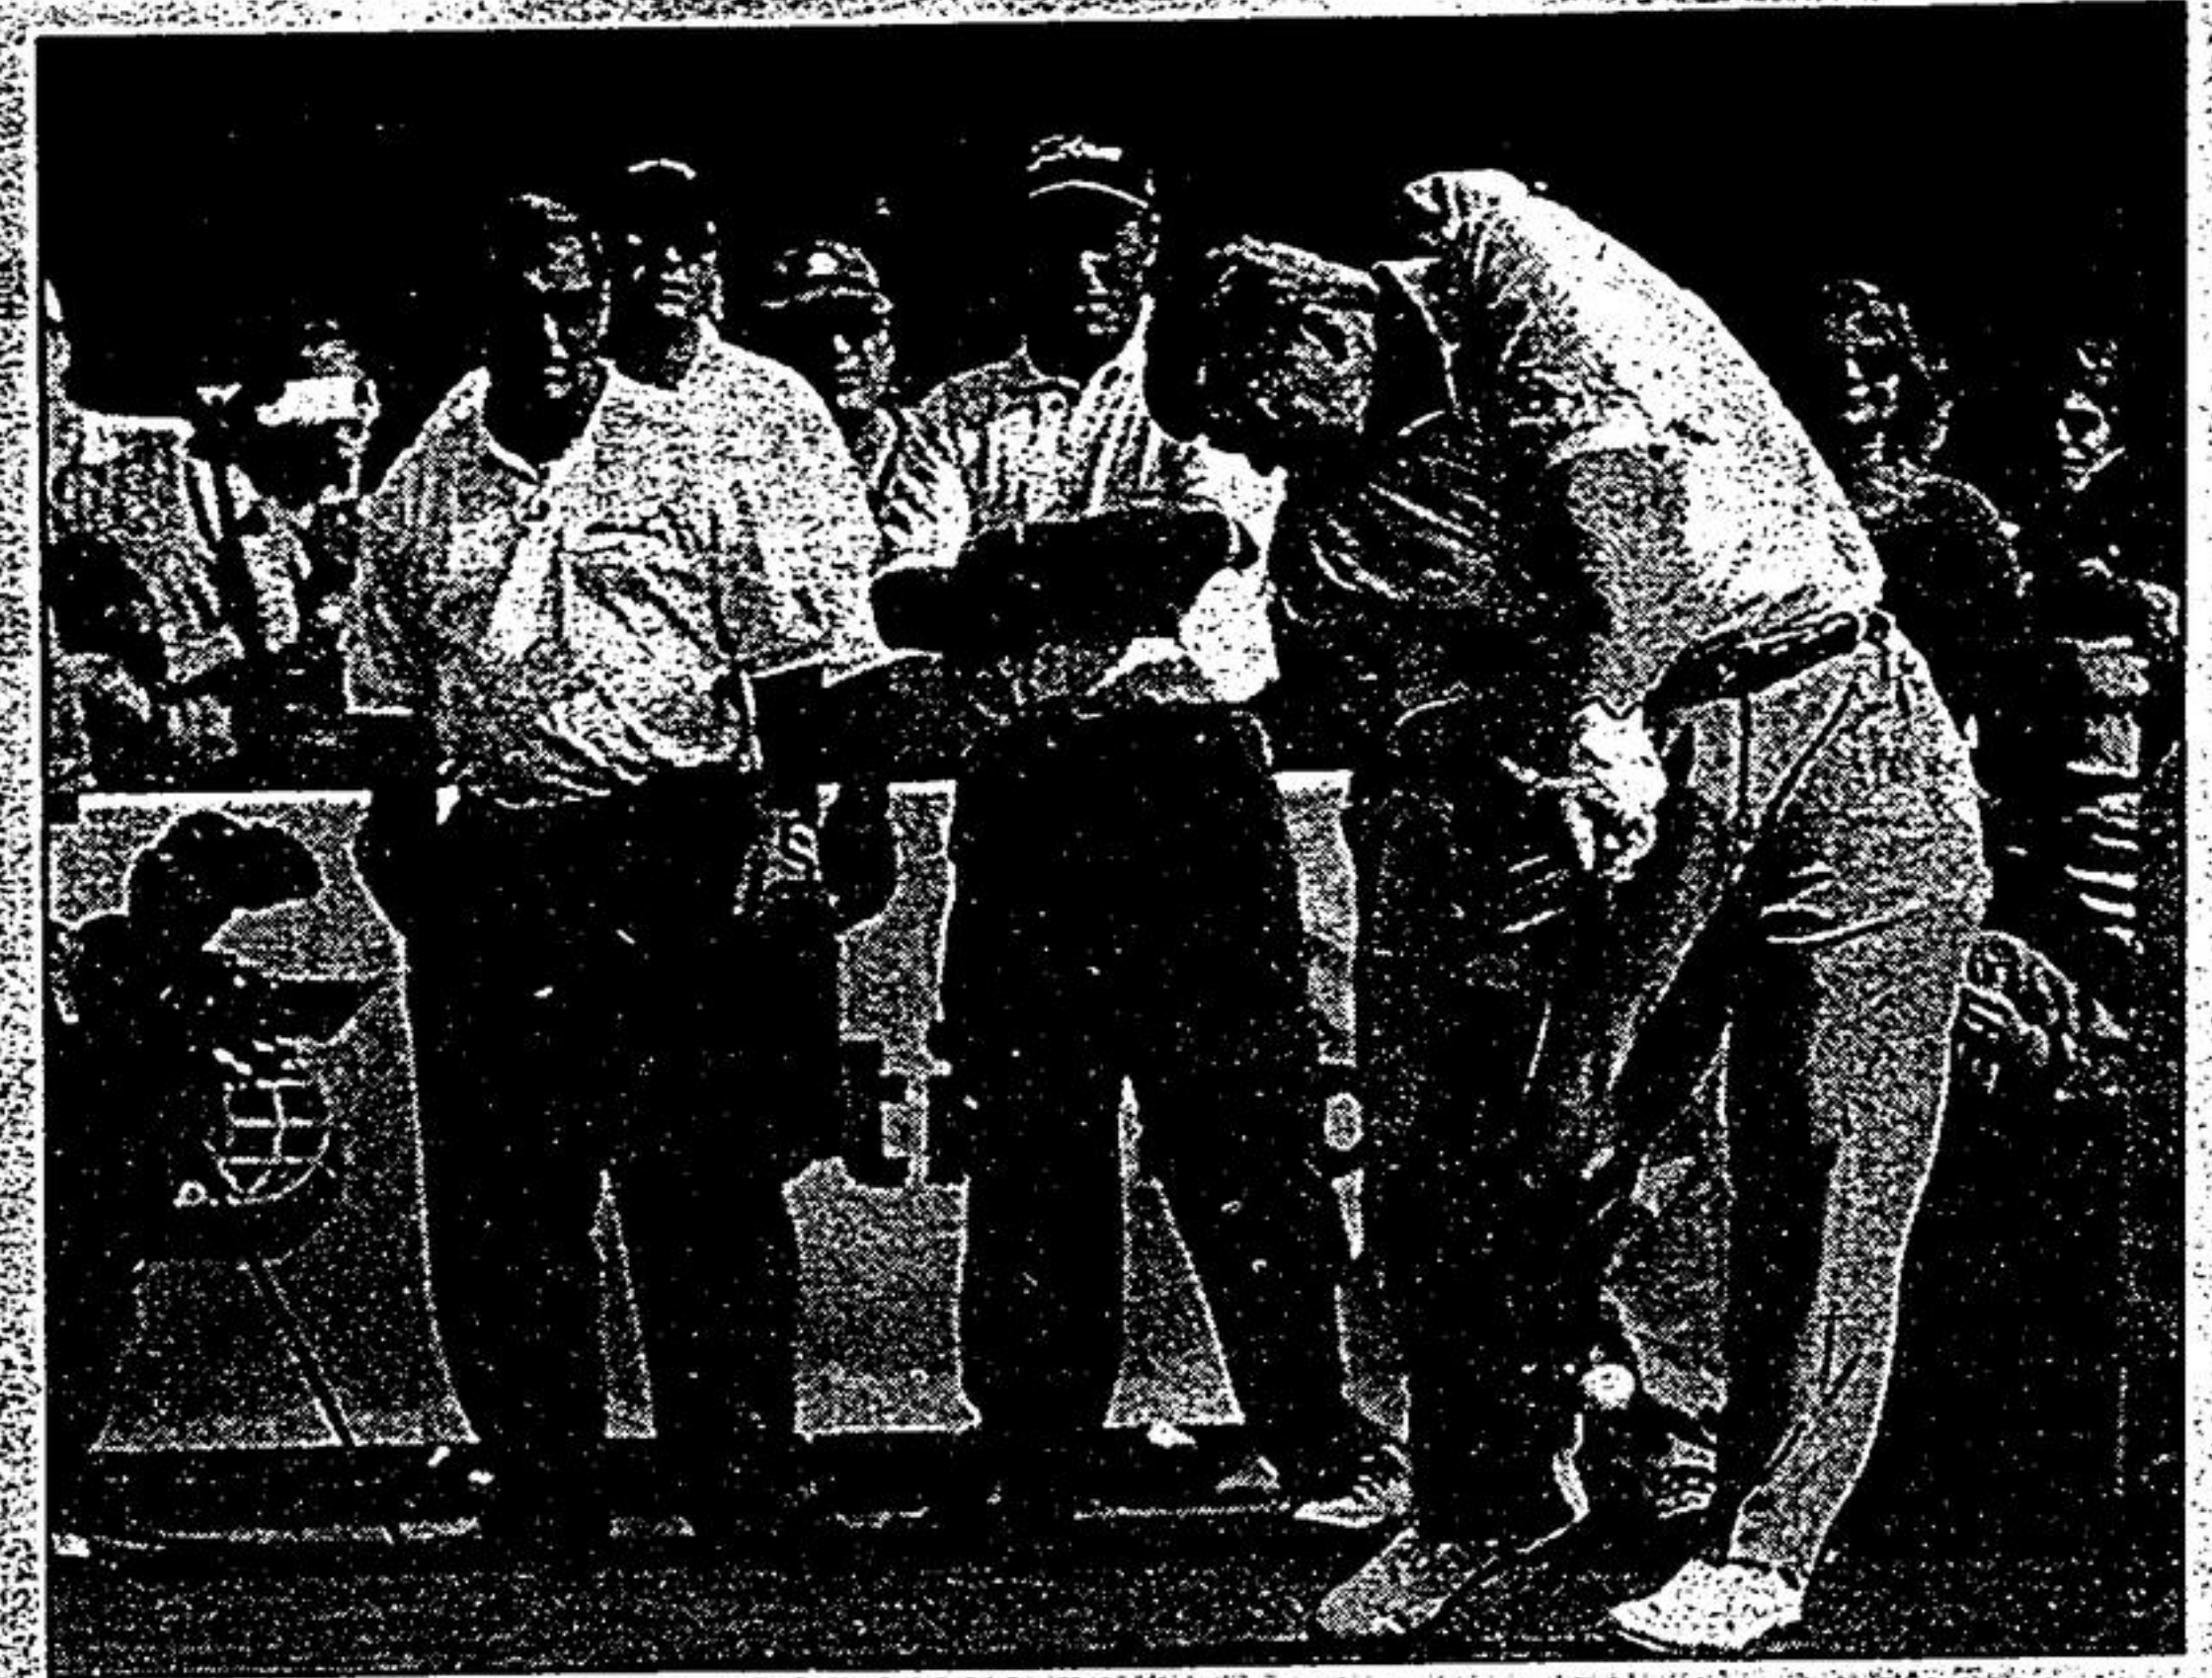

When all was said and done, Daly and his partner, Stephen Baldwin, claimed four skins while Bradley and Calabra had three and Tryba and Stockwell two.

But the biggest winner was the Leukemia Research Fund of Canada, which received the participants' earnings of $225,000.

"We had a blast," said Daly after the game. "It's great to come here to play golf with some good friends and make fun of our games and laugh about it. It's for the kids."

"I can't thank everybody enough. To raise this much money is a measure (of their commitment)," he added.

The 1995 British Open champion was also quick to thank Zoeller for appearing as a last-minute replacement for Chi Chi Rodriguez, who had to opt out due to a shoulder injury.

Kibbutzing with the gathering throughout the nine-hole event, the quick-witted and humorous Zoeller didn't hesitate to offer assistance to his good friend Daly.

"I was home in Indiana and I got a call on Saturday from John (Daly), who said he needed help."

"Like any pro on the tour, we're here to help the other pros," said the 1979 Masters and 1984 U.S. Open champion.
