A new source of York Region news and information went live on the internet today at yrng.com.

Promising to redefine how York Region residents stay in touch with their communities, yrng.com is best described as an interactive neighbourhood.

Not only can visitors catch up on the latest news, they can search through a selection of archived stories from the past few months, search the internet for York Region-based web sites, take part in online debates about local issues and find a community event that's close to home.

It all amounts to a big step forward for the York Region Newspaper Group, a collection of community newspapers published by Metroland Printing, Publishing and Distributing. You're likely more familiar with the newspapers themselves:

The Era-Banner in Newmarket, Aurora, Georgina, East Gwillimbury and King Township

The Liberal in Richmond Hill, Thornhill and Vaughan
Markham Economist and Sun
Stouffville Tribune
Georgina Advocate and
The Stouffville Sun.

This collection of award-winning newspapers is the driving force behind much of the content currently available. Combining these resources has allowed us to build York Region's most comprehensive web environment — an online portal to your community at large.

It's your ultimate destination to access the online content.

"We're definitely pleased to finally be able to offer York Region residents something they deserve and that's a web environment dedicated to our nine communities," said York Region Newspaper Group publisher Ian Proudfoot.

"But we also understand this launch simply represents the first step of a long journey. It's our goal to become York Region's definitive online community."

So now we need some help to give the site some soul and to make it part of your everyday life.

Stop by for a visit and let us know what you think. You can reach us at newsroom@econsun.com.
