WHAT WAS SAID IN 2000

"This fraud is in excess of $3 million. Some people have lost their life savings. There are numerous widows, elderly widows. They trusted this man completely. In my opinion, he targetted the most vulnerable in society. It's a sad case, really."

— York Regional Police Det. Fred Kerr, with the major fraud unit, speaking about David Blow, 42, of Mount Albert. The former life insurance agent is charged with defrauding numerous clients.

"I honestly don't know what it's going to take for them to close this building. Do they need bodies piled outside the door? Do they need ambulances parked out front?"

— Val Erwin, a court reporter and union steward with OPSEU, said days before Flaherty agreed to close the building. His decision came a week after three people had to be taken from the courthouse by ambulance.

"The temporary closure of the courts will ensure the administration of justice will not be compromised. It will also ensure clean up is completed more quickly and court staff and the public, who must attend court proceedings, are in a safe and healthy environment."

— Attorney General Jim Flaherty, announcing the courthouse would close for 60 days last summer to remove toxic mould. The building remains closed and is now expected to reopen next spring.

"My objective always in policing has been to determine the real needs of the community, as opposed to one size fits all!"

— New York Regional Police Chief Bob Middaugh.

"A realistic and workable proposal."

— Jim Jones, Markham Tory MP, on his plans to run for both the Tory and Canadian Alliance nominations in the election.

"You can't play for two teams."

— Joe Clark, Tory leader, on his decision to toss Jones out of the Tory caucus.
