

New You

How To Make Your Wedding Picture Perfect

You've set the date, booked the church and the hall, and now it's time to select the photographer. Whatever you do, don't fall into the trap that some unfortunate bride and grooms have done by enlisting a friend or relative to take their wedding photographs. Remember, this is a once in a lifetime event that can't be repeated, and unless the person you've selected to capture your special day is photographing weddings every week, chances are pretty good they simply don't have the expertise or equipment to do the job properly.

You've already spent a fortune on your dress, the flowers, banquet hall, and everything else that makes the day so special, so it simply doesn't make sense not to get a professional photographer to look after your photographic needs for the day.

If you haven't started looking around for a photographer, you should do so as soon as possible. As a general rule, you should start at least nine months before your actual wedding date.
