

THE BEST OF NEASE: MARKING SEPT. 11, 2001

Cartoonist paid tribute to heroes, attacked villains

Cartoonist Steve Nease (left) was prolific in the weeks following the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks on the United States, chronicling the events in his own sharp way. He poked fun at the bad guys for us, he let us share a tear for what was, he paid tribute to heroes. The cartoons spoke volumes about the world in Sept. 11's aftermath.

Some cartoons sparked your anger ... including one that mocked an American bombing mistake. But all of them prompted discussion.

These are some of Nease's works.

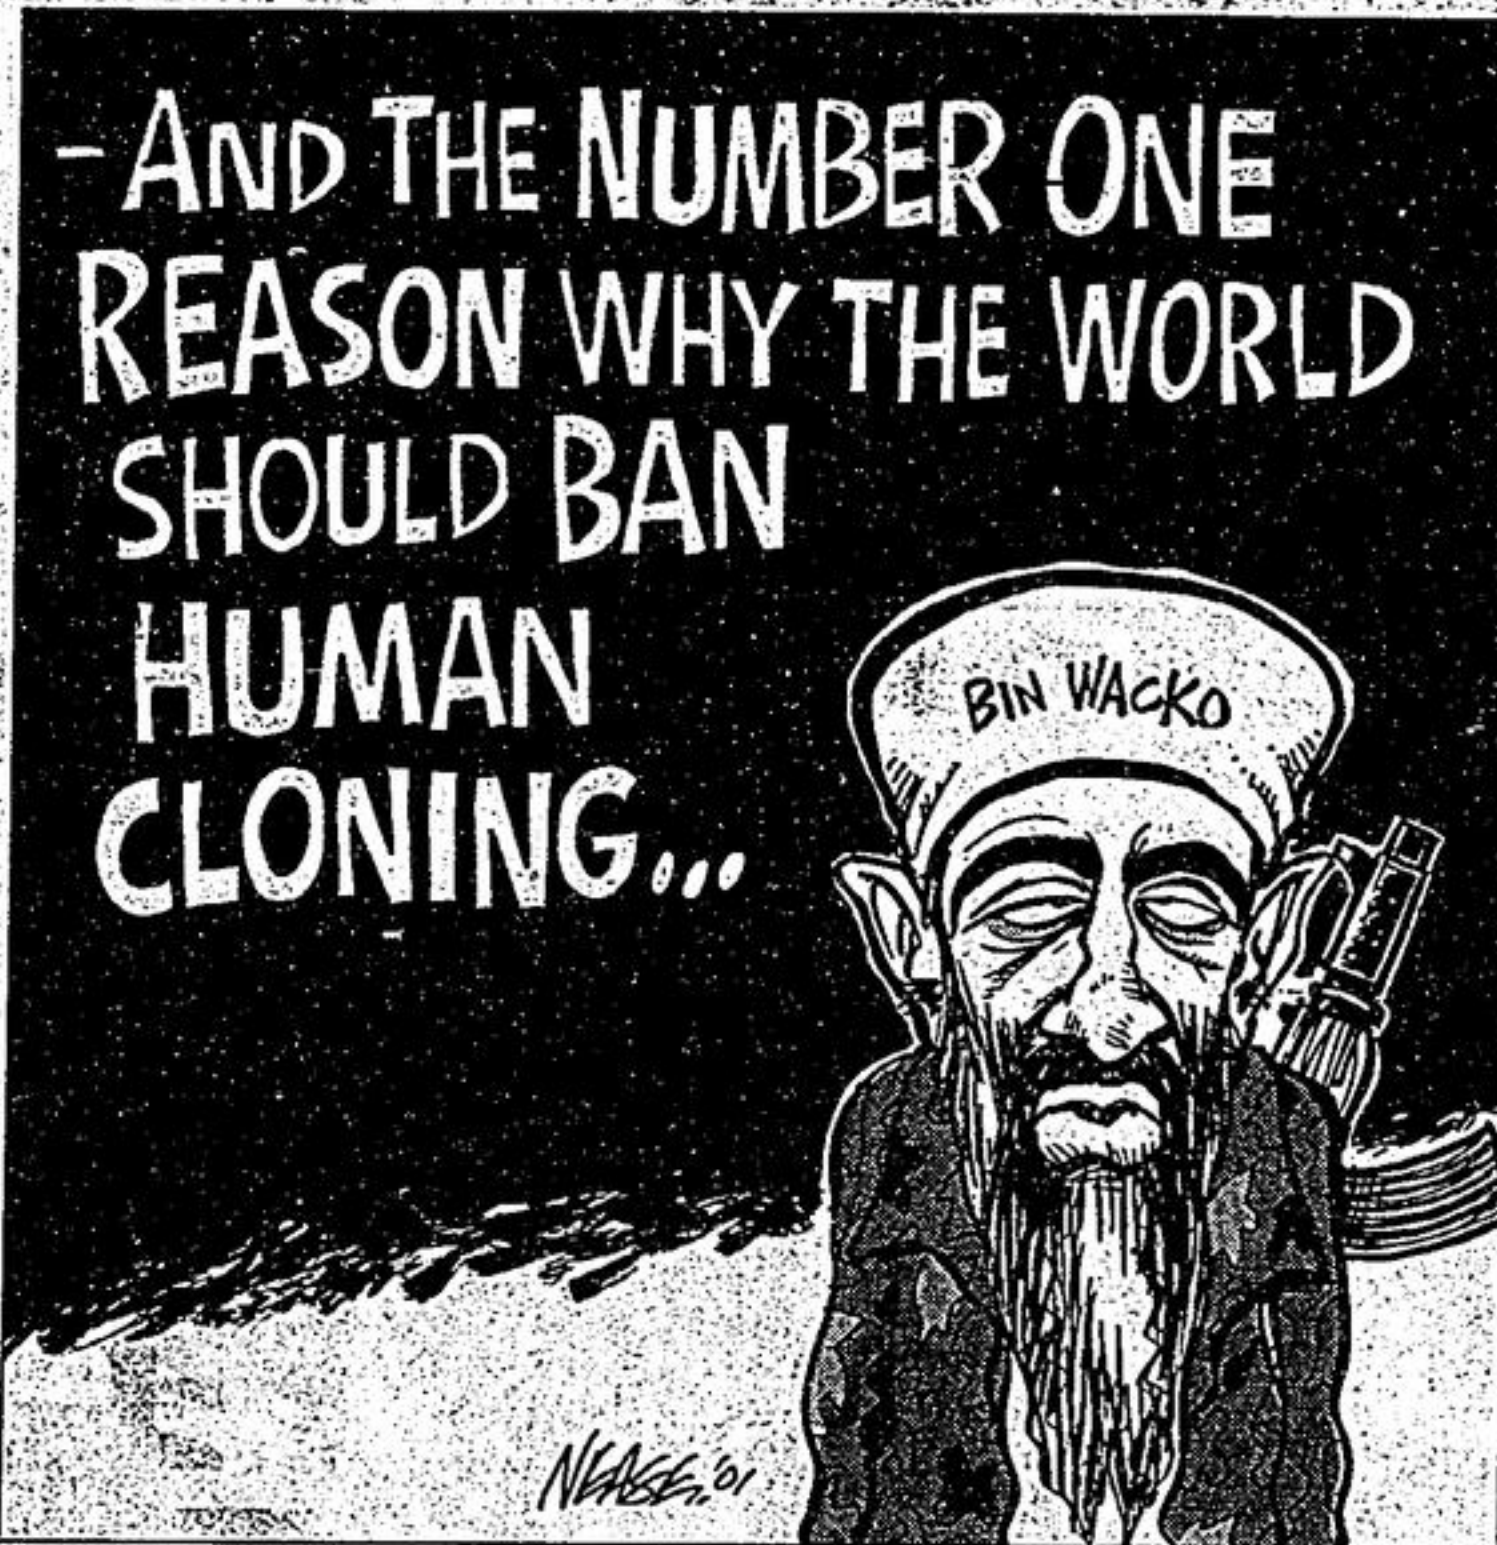

Lady Liberty shed a tear the day the twin towers of the World Trade Center collapsed after terrorists flew hijacked jets into them.

When a flight bound for the Dominican Republic crashed in New York just weeks later (left), Nease commented on the fact that neither terrorism nor fate could keep Lady Liberty down.

When news of advancements in human cloning made headlines in November, Nease pointed out a good reason to forget about it (far left).

Heroes meeting heroes (left), veterans and firefighters are cut from the same brave cloth.

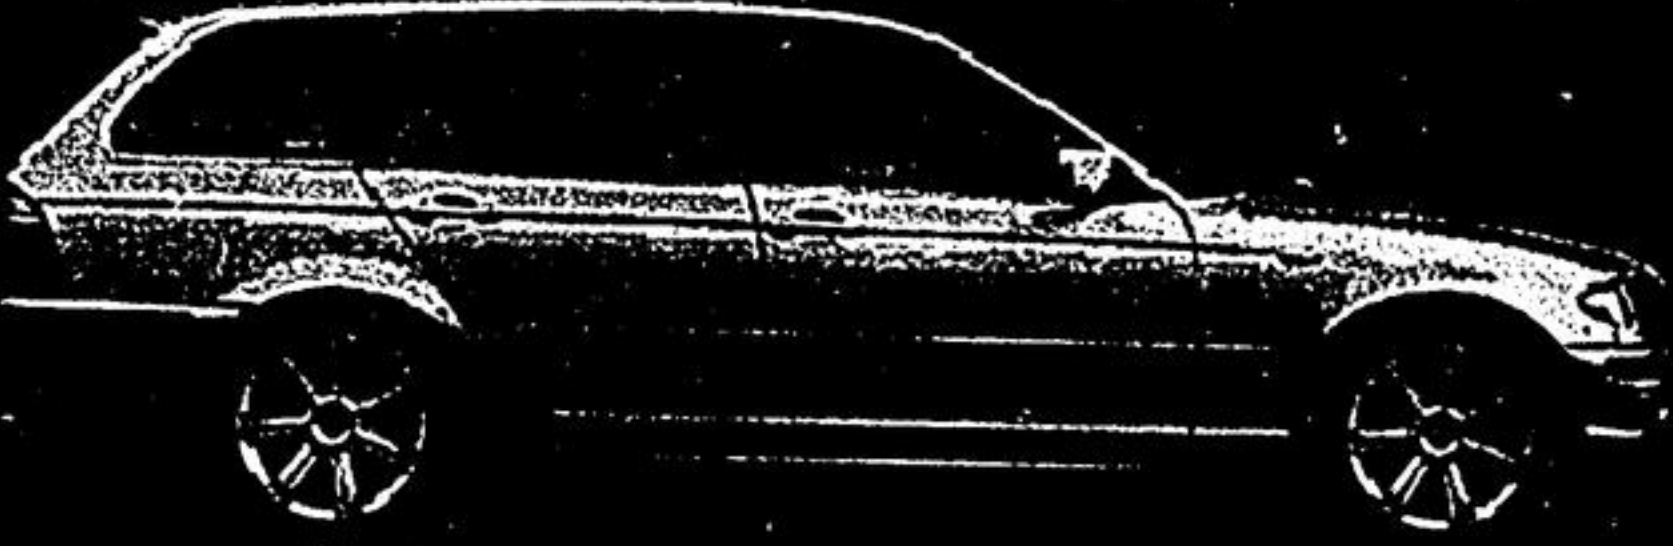

The face of evil on Halloween (below).

Nease commented on Canada's involvement in the war in these three cartoons ... the waterboy, the tourist, the battle plan.
