Next math test counts for marks: principal

(where some rural Whitchurch-Stouffville students attend).

There, 91 per cent of academic-level students passed with 51 per cent meeting the provincial standard, while 78 per cent of applied-level students passed and 16 per cent met the provincial standard.

Unlike the Grade 10 literacy test, which students need to pass in order to graduate, the math test is an assessment only, Mr. Fazzari said.

In order to encourage the students to take it more seriously, this year, results from part of the assessment count towards the students' final mark. He also noted that the applied-level course was designed so students could transfer to the academic level in Grade 10.

Few students do, Mr. Fazzari said. And in offering that flexibility, the applied-level course is more difficult than it should be, making many students struggle in order to accommodate a few.
