

Economist & Sun, Tribune win awards

Editorial staff of the York Region group of newspapers received 11 Metroland Awards of Excellence this week as papers in the community newspaper chain celebrated achievements in their corporate family.

TorStar Corporation owns 77 Metroland newspapers in Southern Ontario. The York Region group collected 10 wins and five honourable mentions, including four awards for excellence in advertising.

First-place honours included the Newarket/Aurora Era-Banner as the best newspaper in its circulation class.

Dave Teetzel, editor of the Richmond Hill/Thornhill Liberal and the Vaughan Citizen, was named the chain's best columnist for a column on race relations.

Markham Economist and Sun/Stouffville Tribune reporters Mike Adler and Kathleen Griffin split a reporter initiative award for Grappling With Gridlock, a special section on transportation issues in Markham.

The Economist & Sun won Metroland's award for front page tabloid design in the highest circulation class. The Advocate in Georgina won the same category for a paper with circulation of 10,000-40,000.

The Liberal was honoured for best broadsheet front page.

Ms Griffin also received honourable mentions in the best news story and best feature categories.

Other honourable mentions went to the Era-Banner for best tabloid front page, best layout and best sports section.

Advertising departments of the York Region Newspaper Group also won four Metroland awards in a separate competition.

The Economist & Sun received the award for best advertisement in its circulation class, while the The Liberal was given the prize for best use of colour in an advertisement.

The entire group was recognized as having the best automotive section and best community partnership in the newspaper chain.
