in the States.

Another example: he has a T. Norris & Son Planes Company plane still in the original box, priced at $2,600. The T. Norris & Son Plane Company went out of business after World War Two. And Murali says, "It's rare to come across vintage plane of this quality."

He said a Stanley #1 Plane, still in the box, is worth $5,000 US "if you can find it."

Murali, who is an accountant by profession, said, "I enjoy woodworking. It's my hobby. I've been collecting tools for 10 years."

He's used to live in New Zealand and that's when he started collecting antique tools, by going to auctions. He's also travelled in the hunt for antique wood working tools to Australia, United States and the United Kingdom.

And here's a news flash for antique tool lovers — woodworkers who love to use hand tools and can't afford to use antique tools, "my friends have formed a company, The Shepherd Tool Company, based in Cambridge, and they've come out with a kit," explained Murali. The kits cost $180 to $260 and take 30 hours to put the plane together. If you purchase the "Glove Fit" wood infills and
