

Seats fit you and your car

Trading in your stock seats for modern sport seats seems like a pretty simple plan. You want the comfort, style, support and flexibility that the factory units just weren't able to deliver. However, there are literally hundreds of styles from dozens of manufacturers available in just about every colour and material under the sun. Once you get past that, there's the features of each to contend with. If you want to cut straight through all the red cloth, one that gets your attention is the Sparco Milano, which is designed to be comfortable while at the same time sporting a contemporary design (it's trimmed with shiny metal pieces) that would look great in just about any car. The backrest can be reclined to whatever position you need (no increments) and features the exclusive quick-tilt system for rapid return to the upright position. It also features a special contoured injection-molded 'memory' foam that allows the seat to mold to your shape using just the heat of your body. To keep you put through the twisty bits, the chair has touring-car-inspired side-load-absorbing bolsters. It also features a lumbar adjustment. The seat comes finished in Alcantara (a suede-like material) in one of many colors, or leather (black and tan only). The seat measures in at just 20.5-inches wide at the base, which allows it to fit most cars. Prices start at about $1,400 per chair. ### Taching it to the next level

Worrying about buying a tachometer that's specific to a four-, six- or eight-cylinder engine is a thing of the past now that Dakota Digital has arrived on the scene with its new tach interface. Normally when you buy a tachometer you have to specify how many cylinders your engine has so the gauge will read the correct RPM once hooked up. But, let's say you swap out the six-cylinder engine in your Mustang for an eight cylinder. Normally after doing this, the dash tach wouldn't work properly. Instead of tearing out the old one and hunting around for a donor, just plug in Dakota's interface. It doesn't matter what engine, what car or what tach you have. For example, let's say you find a tachometer in the newspaper classifieds that would be perfect for your vehicle, but it wasn't built for the engine you have. No problem: Dakota Digital's interface will allow you to use it. Installation is fairly straightforward, but in some cases you'll need a factory-wiring diagram (or the help of a competent electrical technician buddy) to complete the installation. For more information on the US $79.95 unit, call Dakota Digital at 1-800-593-4160 or go to dakotadigital.com.

Rat Fink revival

If you're a fan of the late, great Ed 'Big Daddy' Roth (and who isn't), the artist and designer of numerous wild custom cars and trucks of our past, his legend lives on through Mooneyes USA. The company has created a full line of Big Daddy custom accessories, models and other fun stuff, many of which are based on one of Ed's most loveable creations, Rat Fink, a nervous, yet sinister-looking rodent. Many of the reproduction items sold through Moon are based on nostalgic pieces that haven't been seen in years, such as the wild resin sculpted heads of Ed's artistic creations and many Rat Fink items including shifter balls, and pewter and plastic keychains. For the ultimate collector, Moon has re-released a numbered pewter casting of Rat Fink driving a custom rod. Prices range from US $1 for a key chain, to $8.50 for a mouse pad (pictured), all the way up through to a signed 1/25 scale 1916 Studebaker panel truck bank that sells for $175. For all your Big Daddy needs, mouse your way to <http://mooneyesusa.com/01NEW.html> (catalog page).
