Making sure the wheels fit

It used to be that ordering a custom set of wheels and tires for your vehicle was largely a question of trial and error. You'd choose a set of rims that you think would fit, mount some usually oversized rubber, bolt the combination in place and hope that nothing rubs or damages either your car or your new wheel/tire combo on the initial test drive. In some cases, the retailer from which you purchased these ill-fitting products, won't exchange or refund your purchase – especially if they're damaged – leaving you out of luck, not to mention out of pocket. Now, with the Tire MountMate from Wheelworks, you can avoid this potentially expensive problem. Simply affix one of your oversized tires to Tire MountMate, bolt the assembly to the wheel hub and move the tire inboard or outboard for the best fit. Take the measurements (backspacing is the most important) and give your wheel supplier a call. That's all there really is to it. The tool adjusts to act like a 14-20 inch diameter rim with widths that vary from seven to 16 inches. It's priced at US $299 and can be ordered by contacting Wheel Works at 1-866-499-6757, or online at www.wheelworks.cc.

Hot cars melt your crayons

Cool gloves for cold days

For anyone who has ever had to work on their car in a cold garage, or outdoors during the wintertime, you know how numb your hands can get. Now Mechanix Wear has come up with Cold Weather Gloves, the ideal solution to prevent the dreaded finger frostbite. The company has taken its popular Original Glove and added a special 3M Thinsulate lining. This combination will not only keep your digits nice and toasty when the mercury dips, but still provide maximum flexibility along with a secure grip when working with tools. A pair of Cold Weather gloves is priced at just US $30, only $5 more than a pair of Original Gloves. To get yours (while your dialing finger still has some sensation left) visit www.mechanix.com.
