

This ramp is ready for anything

We can all agree that pickup trucks are nearly indispensable for hauling anything larger than a breadbox. But, the bed is a few feet from the ground, which can make heavy objects (such as motorcycles) a pain to move in and out (because you have to lift and jump in and out). What if someone made a ramp that attached in seconds and then folded up and out of the way like it was never there? That would be great, right? And what if that same ramp could be converted into a safety fence to secure longer items resting on the lowered tailgate? You'd probably buy it. So, get ready to give Cordesign a call for its clever ReadyRamp, which meets all the criteria. ReadyRamp mounts to the stock tailgate brackets (which means no drilling), has a 450-kilogram (1,000-pound) load rating and extends the useful length of the bed by the depth of the tailgate. It also folds flat for easy storage in the cab and has enough attaching hardware for just about any truck on the road. Best of all, the suggested list price of around $450 (depending on whether you have a compact or full-size pickup). Visit readyramp.com or call 1-800-549-4620 for more information.

Keep your hitch, hitched

If you've ever towed a trailer that became unhitched while you're driving... well, you know it's a very stressful, if not catastrophic time. In some cases, the trailer will drop to the ground and dig in, or even slam into the towing vehicle as you hit the brakes. These ordeals can be a thing of the past with the Saf-t-Tow system, which has a redesigned receiver (with a traditional ball) and a strong steel ring mounted below it. The trailer is hooked up as usual, but a link-mounted safety device is attached to the tongue or the coupler on the trailer. The safety link, which is made up of two flat hooks, attaches to the lower ring. In the event the trailer becomes unhooked, the link below the coupler will keep it attached. The Saf-t-Tow coupling systems come in class 2 or 3 configurations and retails for about $150. For more information, you can again call 1-888-811-9004 or visit www.saf-t-tow.com.
