

More light changes on 407

Some residents on Rougehaven Way, Charlotte Angliss Road and Schouten Crescent in east-end Markham are still fighting the battle of the lights.

But it seems town staff and the operators of Hwy. 407 have agreed to make some changes that should help those still bothered by the excessive lighting at the Markham Road ramp.

Shields installed a year ago after the problem first came to light have reduced the amount of light spillage onto most residential properties.

But some people were still complaining about the "perceived brightness," a consultant's report said.

The 407 ETR has agreed to completely shield three high-mast lights in the exit's northeast quadrant in early 2003 and, if concerns remain, to shield three others in the northwest, southwest and southeast quadrants.
