

Golf course can't cut trees

BY MIKE ADLER

Provincial protection for the Oak Ridges Moraine prevents owners of a Whitchurch-Stouffville golf course from cutting trees on the property, York Region politicians decided last week.

Sleepy Hollow Golf and Country Club on the town's Tenth Line applied last month to cut about two acres of forest to reclaim an old golf tee and create a new hole.

Environment

But the region said the land near Stouffville Creek, part of the Duffins Creek system, is within a natural linkage area established under the Oak Ridges Moraine Conservation Act.

A proposed area for cutting is above a swampy area where a coldwater stream flows out to the creek, according to Ontario's natural resources ministry.

The owners promised only selective cutting in the area around the tee, but, in a report, the region said it was "unlikely" the province "could conclude that the expansion of the playing areas of this course into key natural heritage features or hydrologically sensitive features would bring the use into closer conformity with the (moraine) plan."
