Child pornography charge laid

A 21-year-old Markham man has been charged with possessing child pornography and police have seized his computer, hard drive and dozens of CD-ROMs.

York Regional Police began the investigation in 2001, after receiving information from the Ontario Provincial Police's Project Snowball.

That project identifies people who have purchased child porn on the Internet and passes the information to local police forces for further investigation, Const. Steve Morrell said.

"We prioritize that list in terms of the person's involvement in the community - is he a teacher or a coach? While we try to get to those investigations as expeditiously as possible, we are continually evaluating that list.

Const. Morrell refused to release the name of the street where the accused lives, because he does not own the home. It's near 16th and Woodbine avenues, he added.

Investigators are now beginning the arduous process of cataloguing the contents of the man's computer and CD-ROMs.

He has been released on bail and appears in the Ontario Court of Justice in Newmarket Aug. 26.
