

OSPACA too busy for public clinic

Pemberton. "It's proved to be a very costly undertaking to service animals in the centre as well as at the public clinic.

"Our primary mandate is for animals brought into the shelter in, for instance, abuse cases, and we're not able to provide services to a growing client base for our public clinic."

He said the clinic has about 600 clients who will be advised of the pending closure by mail. "We want to help clients to find alternative services."

Mr. Landory believes the clinic could be kept open with an infusion of volunteers and money.

"I don't think they're going about this in the right way. They only have a message on the answering machine (asking for a donation) when you call in. If we could get some people together to call out for donations, they could stay in business.

'Maybe we could get a picture of the mayor with a sick cat in his hand to generate interest.'

"Maybe we could get a picture of the mayor with a sick cat in his hand to generate interest. I'd be willing to sit here all day and call people for donations."
