 cally controlled five-speed automatic transmission with manual shift mode. It features a short final-drive gear ratio of 3.133:1 for strong acceleration. An Electronic Torque-Demand Powertrain Control system manages engine power, throttle position, and gear selection to optimize performance and smoothness.
 Q45 combines a rigid body and compliant suspension system - four-wheel independent suspension with a strut front and multi-link rear. The performance-tuned active damping "RJ" suspension has been retuned for sportier handling on the 2005 Q45.
 Braking is provided by four-wheel vented discs with anti-lock (ABS) function. The system features Electronic Brake force Distribution (EBD) and Brake Assist (BA). EBD controls front and rear brake distribution depending on load condition (passengers and cargo), while BA senses hard or panic pedal application and helps provide maximum braking capacity.

 Q45 is also equipped with Vehicle Dynamic Control (VDC), a system that controls brake pressure and engine torque automatically. It helps to improve vehicle stability during understeer, oversteer or adverse road conditions. The Q45 also includes Intelligent Cruise Control with Preview Braking, which uses laser sensors, throttle and brakes to maintain a set distance between the Q45 and a vehicle in front of it.
 The 2005 Q45 also gets new 18-inch chrome-finished aluminum alloy wheels with 245/45R18 V-speed rated all-season tires and a Tire Pressure Monitor System (TPMS).
 The 2005 Q45, unveiled at the 2004 New York International Auto Show in early April, goes on sale at Infiniti dealers across Canada in July, 2004.
