

SDSS math students earn honours in national competitions

The highest-achieving mathematics students at Stouffville District Secondary School brought back scores from several national mathematics competitions placing them in the top 25 per cent of participants across the country.

Students were recognized by SDSS and the York Region District School Board for achievements in competitions and top scores in the school math curriculum.

Kayla Deasley achieved the highest marks in Grade 9 in the Pascal mathematics contest.

Kayla and Ben Reesor, also in Grade 9, received certificates for being among the top 25 per cent of Canadian participants.

Two other students won medals and received certificates of distinction: Kaitlyn Taylor in the Grade 10 Cayley contest and Nicole Mashinter in the Grade 11 Fermat contest. Alexandra Daigle received the top score at SDSS in the Euclid contest.

In total, about 60 SDSS students competed in a variety of mathematics competitions.

"We try to encourage as many Grade 9s and 10s as possible to enter mathematics contests," mathematics department head Vicki Schulz said.

The top mathematics students at SDSS were awarded excellence in mathematics awards.

In Grade 9, Demetre Papas achieved the highest marks in essential mathematics and Spencer Crowe in applied math. Michelle Kerr won the award for Grade 9 academic math.

Grade 10 winners are Mark Lofthouse for essential, Bessie Steele for applied and Alan Nagel for academic mathematics. Julie Hayward had the highest marks in Grade 11 workplace mathematics. Justin Stierhof in college math, Kanishma Desai in university/college math and Jan Viljoen in university mathematics. In Grade 12, Peter Giammarco was tops in workplace math, Jaimie King in college apprenticeship math,

Kassie Den Broeder in college technical math, Brooke Acton in university calculus, Ashley Sakaguchi in university data management and Colin Eles in university geometry and discrete mathematics.
