

Hydro tower opponents to meet Monday

An information meeting Monday on the proposed route for the hydro transmission towers running from Markham to Newmarket is expected to attract a large crowd.

Stop Transmission Lines Over People (STOP) is hosting the meeting from 7 to 9 p.m. at Premier Ballroom and Convention Centre, 9019 Leslie St., one block north of Hwy. 7 in Thornhill.

"It is estimated that hundreds of people will attend this meeting," STOP spokesperson Sue Fusco said.

In the near future, Hydro One is expected to announce its recommendations for the delivery of the new power supply for York Region.

Hydro One's plan calls for the current 80-foot towers to be replaced by 135-foot towers spaced 900 feet apart, compared to the present 1,200-foot distance.

Residents in Markham and Aurora have protested the plans, saying they are concerned about visual impacts, declining property values and potential health concerns over electromagnetic fields associated with hydro transmission lines.

York Region, the Catholic school board and councils in Markham, Aurora, Vaughan and King have also expressed opposition to the project.

Hydro One says it has decided on the route of the transmission towers and it runs from Markham through Aurora and into Newmarket.

At a recent meeting in Newmarket, Hydro One director of system development Carmen Marcello said the company is prepared to file the necessary papers for its preferred option for the 230-kilovolt line — the existing 24-kilometre corridor running from the Parkway transformer station in Markham to the Armitage station in Newmarket.

"Over 2,000 residents have signed electronic and hard copy petitions opposing Hydro One's publicly stated preferred solution," Mrs. Fusco said.

The meeting is intended to offer an update regarding the actions taken by STOP and a Markham-Aurora task force that was set up by the two municipalities.
