Chamber seeks best businesses

Residents have their yearly chance to applaud their favourite business or service in the 11th annual Whitchurch-Stouffville Chamber of Commerce awards.

Awards will be presented April 14 to the top business (company award), entrepreneur (individual award), corporate citizen and to an individual or company doing business in the Whitchurch-Stouffville area for 75 years or more.

New this year is the young entrepreneur of the year award. It is for people 30 or younger who have had a business for at least two years.

The chamber has close to 190 members, CEO and president Helene Johnson said. It's a member of the provincial and Canadian chambers of commerce and supports the local business community by offering reduced credit rates and an insurance plan, among other programs.

The chamber holds an annual golf tournament in May, a bring-your-staff-to-lunch event at Christmas and regular networking meetings. It also participates in the Stouffville Igoma Partnership, which strives to help the

Toastmasters in Stouffville

The masters of helping people become comfortable with public speaking are holding an open house in Stouffville.

The local chapter of Toastmasters International has been meeting for a year, growing its membership from a mere handful to more than 25 members. They include people working in TV, the financial sector, investment counselling, fine arts and safety consulting.

People coming to the Jan. 31 open house at 7 p.m. will get a first-hand look at what transpires at Monday evening meetings, complete with prepared and impromptu speeches by members. The open house and regular meetings are in Room 102 at Stouffville District Secondary School.

The club received its charter in December in the presence of Mayor Sue Sherban, veteran journalist Jim Thomas and Toastmasters International executive members Joan Binetti and John Rich.

Vince and Hyacinth DaCosta, who are members of the Markham Toastmasters, started that chapter as well as the Stouffville club. They were also instrumental in starting the Thornhill and Richmond Hill clubs.

All 230 Toastmasters chapters in the district (all of Ontario as far east as Kingston) are holding open houses in January, Mr. DaCosta said. The organization wants to make this district the biggest of the 75 districts around the world.

Toastmasters' international 2005 convention is being held in Toronto in August.

For more information on the open house, call 905-472-5367 or e-mail to vdacosta@lapconnect.com
