IN THE HOUSE

Yuki Yin, a Grade 12 student at Markville Secondary School, uses a chair to hang her art at the McKay House Gallery in downtown Unionville Wednesday. She is one of many students participating in the school's McKay House Project where students produced paintings, drawing and black and white photographs inspired by the building, which at one time was a studio for Canadian Group of Seven artist Fred Varley. The show ends tomorrow.

Documentary reveals amazing facts were charged with conspiracy in the making and distributing of the film and organized crime was implicated in financial improprieties around it. Very colourful indeed.

The documentary also says orders to shut down the film and the people who made it came directly from the White House and President Richard Nixon, who later stepped down for his role in his own little conspiracy, Watergate.

Inside Deep Throat makes archival use of philosophers and thinkers of the day such as Gloria Steinem and Susan Brownmiller with their contemporary counterparts including Camille Paglia, Gore Vidal and a bemused Dick Cavett.

Even the Cosmo girl, Helen Gurley Brown, chimes in.

Deep Throat was made as the birth control pill was leading the sexual revolution, but the film reinforced erroneous ideas about female sexuality, which angered leaders of the women's movement.

It's fascinating to see what became of the so-called revolutionaries who made the film and how their lives were inexorably altered by the experience.

It's interesting to see the original film, 32 years later, is reopening with almost no fuss.
