A Newmarket man made the most expensive call of his life last week: it cost him $500,000.

Dave Sim is the winner of the $1-million prize in the 2005 Heart and Stroke Lottery.

The catch is, Mr. Sim never thought he would win, so he made a deal with his son, Michael, over a family dinner that if either of their tickets won, they would split the winnings.

After winning, Mr. Sim immediately called his son: This was the phone call that cost so much.

"I didn't remember making the deal right away," Mr. Sim said.

"But my wife says I made the deal so I stuck with my word."

On the final day of ticket sales, the Sims and a close friend, Mark Kennedy, bought three tickets to support the foundation.

Even though he and his son will be sharing winnings, Mr. Sim said Mr. Kennedy will not go without something.

When Mr. Sim received a call informing him he was the grand prize winner he thought it was an elaborate scheme devised by Mr. Kennedy.

"When he got home, he made me call the number on the back of the ticket to make sure he did win because he didn't believe it," Manon Sim laughed.

He and his wife plan on keeping their jobs because they love them. They haven't planned any large purchases, instead, the couple wants to invest for retirement.

"It's a nice piece of change to dump into our RRSP," he smiled.

But while dad is planning for retirement, his son is thinking about purchasing several big-ticket items.

"I am going to test drive cars today. I'm looking at investments right now," Michael said.

"I, eventually, want to buy a house, too, but I may wait a little for that," he added.

The family celebrated with neighbours in the driveway the night they realized they had won. They even cracked a Texas mickey of rum, bottled in 1970, they had been saving for a special occasion. $1 million certainly fits that bill.
