

Students show off magic of photography

Exhibit at Angus Glen Nov. 29-Jan. 28

Maureen Cowan enrolled in a Markham photography course to learn the technical aspects of using a camera.

But she emerged from it appreciating the art of taking pictures.

Once a week for 90 minutes, she was one of several students taught by photography teacher Eonjoo Lee.

Ms Cowan attended the class from September 2004 until this spring at the Centennial Community Centre.

Mr. Lee, who has since moved to New York, said his students were good enough to have their work exhibited. So, about eight of them formed a photography group, hoping to show their photos off.

The working title of this exhibit is Markham and More because the students mainly took photos at Markham parks and farms and in Unionville.

"(We took) anything and everything you can imagine around Markham," Ms Cowan said.

But the exhibit will also include photos from Toronto, including Harbourfront.

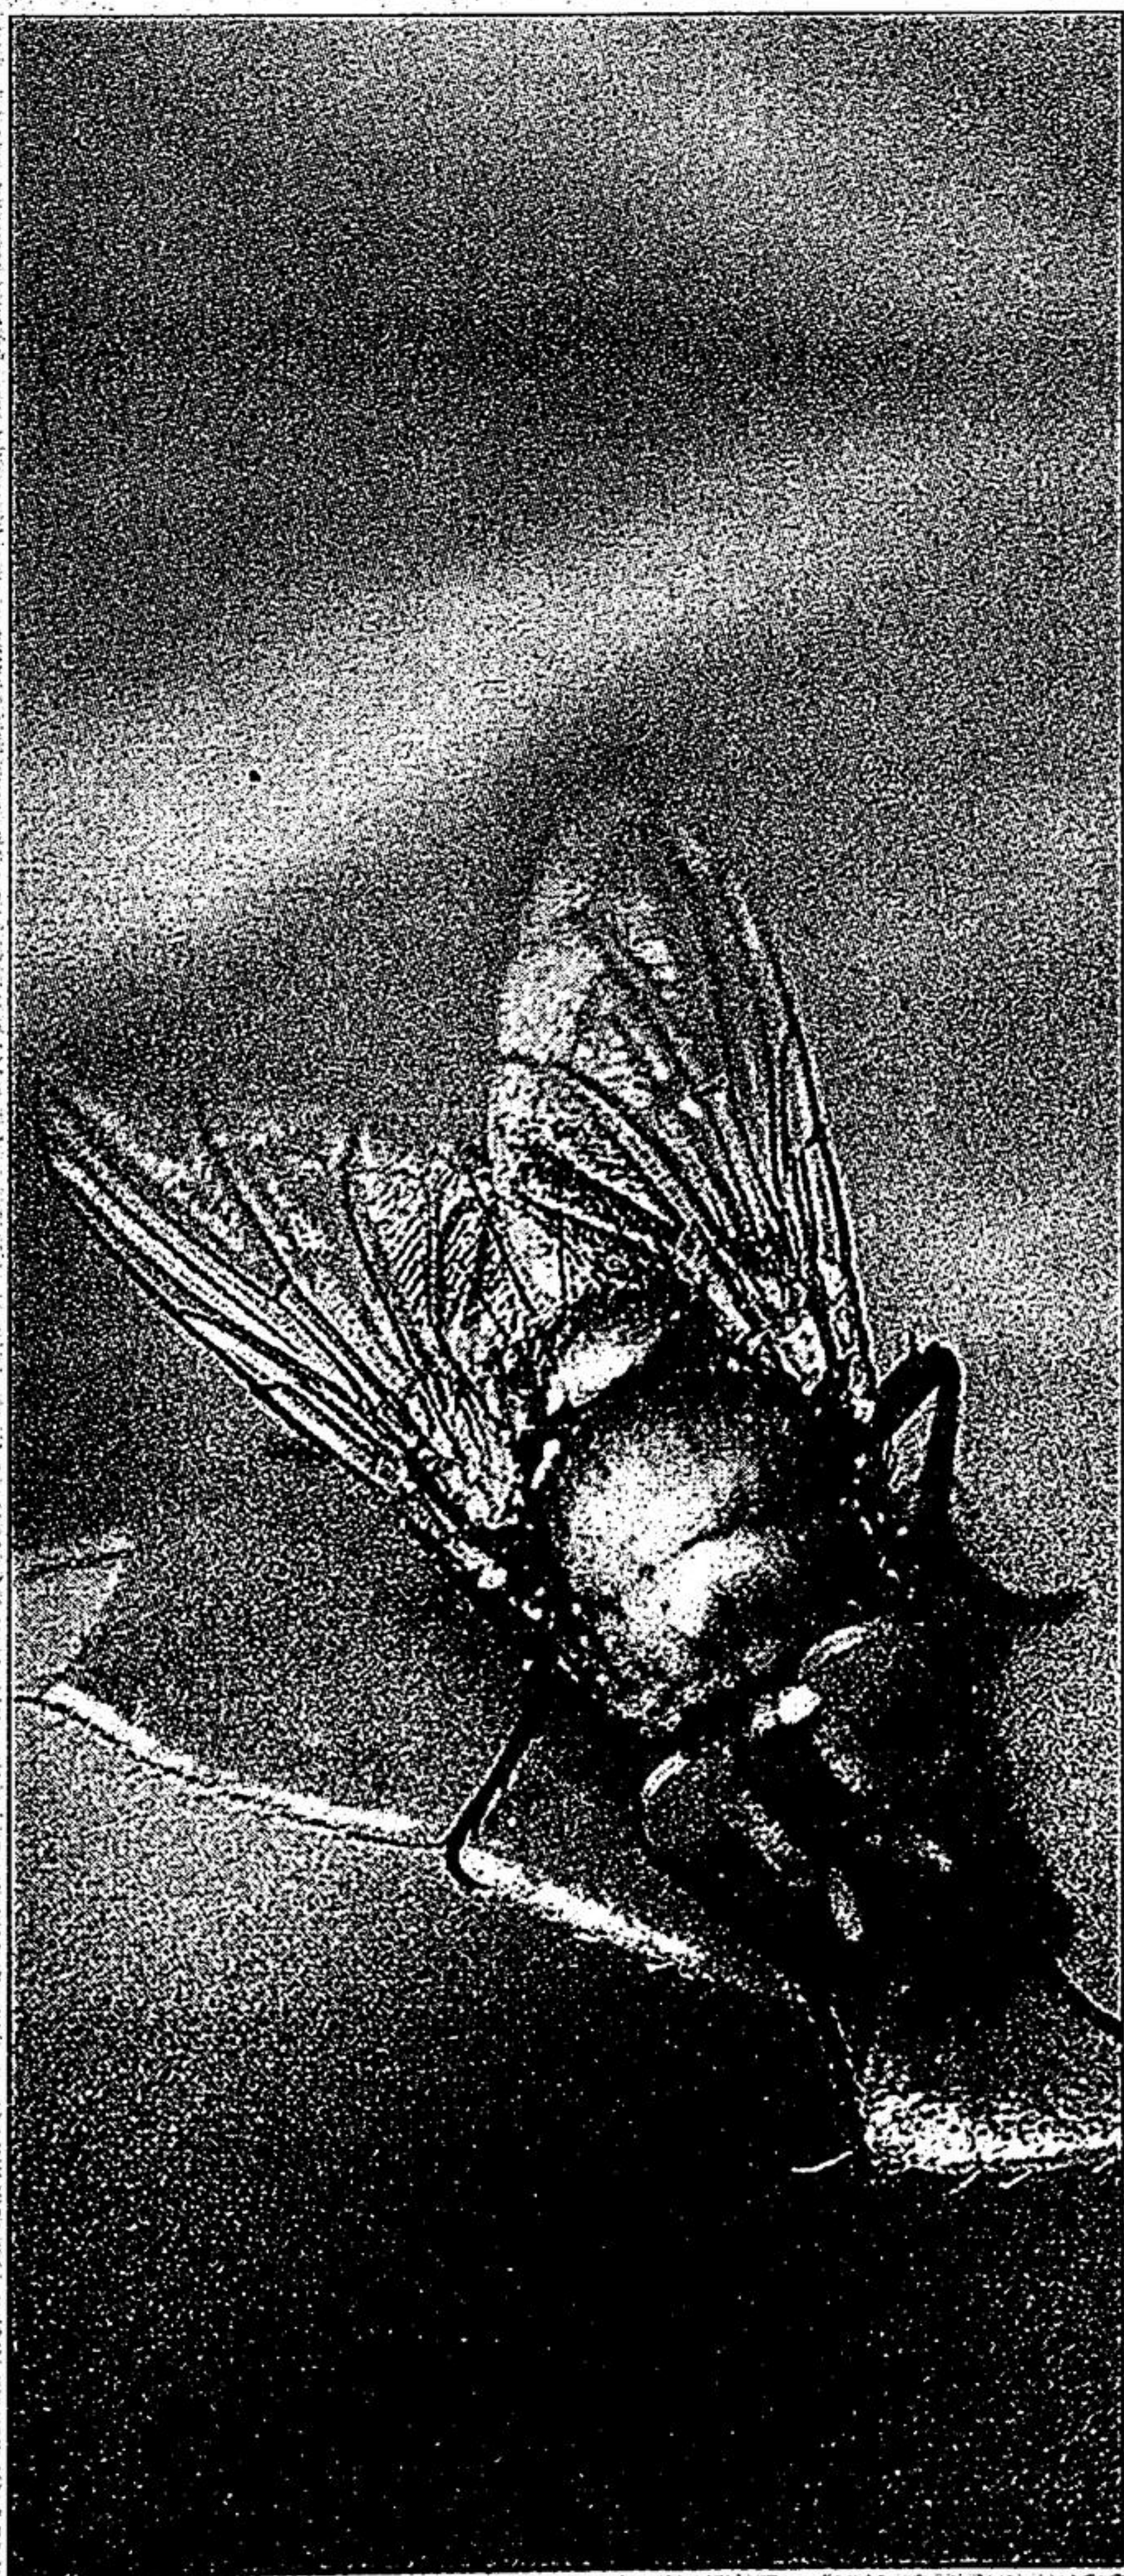

Ms Cowan, 44, attributes the students' progress to Mr. Lee.

"It was amazing how he could show you stuff in a picture," she said.

He showed the students how to see images differently. Mr. Lee showed them, for example, that a blurred picture is not necessarily a bad or spoiled picture. He was also good at showing the students how to recognize if a photo has too much white space.

The exhibit opens Nov. 28 and runs until Jan. 28 at the Angus Glen Library.
