Time to get ready for next bid: Jones

totalling $541,000.

"It's gotta come from somewhere. Hopefully, we don't ever have to use it (the stabilization reserve) for emergency tax funds."

The reserve currently stands at $20 million. While the nature of the reserve is meant for emergency measures, Regional Councillor Jim Jones said the decision was reached by the consensus of regional councillors.

Looking at the bid as more than just a pipe dream, Mr. Jones said a successful bid would have pushed the region for transportation improvements and new facilities.

But far from taking the loss as a failure, Mr. Jones said the region should go ahead with the improvements envisioned in the bid to get ready for future opportunities.

While the Commonwealth Games may not be an option for many more years, Mr. Jones hasn't ruled out bidding on other international events.

JIM JONES: Regional councillor has no regrets over unsuccessful Commonwealth Games bid.

"We'll have to address it when the right opportunity comes along. This was York Region's first crack at it. You have to earn it," Mr. Jones explained, adding the region's bid was thrown together in a short time.

Despite losing the bid to Halifax, Mr. Jones has no regrets.

Hassles continue 5 years after paying ticket

Some of your assets will be seized, a lien will be registered against your property and further action will be taken.

According to a letter Markham resident Dawn Patterson received, she may face all of this for less than $24.

The letter, has to do with a speeding ticket she received five years ago.

She knew she was guilty, so she paid fine the July 12, 2001, according to a collection agency notice.

Five years later, the letter shows up demanding immediate payment of $23.75.

"My initial reaction was confusion," she said. "Then I automatically thought of my credit rating. In my mind, a good credit rating is one of the most important things you can have."

Changes to government policy put the responsibility of collecting the fee on York Region's courts department.

Ms Patterson's outstanding balance could relate to a couple of things, regional spokesperson Michael Kemp said.

The province charges a fee of $20 for late payments and there is a $3.75 charge for a court date requested but not attended, Mr. Kemp said.

The region would not speak about Ms Patterson's case specifically.

Ms Patterson admits she paid the ticket about 35 days after she got it, which is longer than the 15 days as stipulated by the offence notice.

"If there is a $20 late fee, why didn't they tell me five years ago?"
