Think You've Heard It All?

MINIMALLY INVASIVE COCHLEAR IMPLANT SURGERY

Cochlear implants are small electronic devices that contain a microphone, a speech processor, a transmitter, a receiver/stimulator, and electrodes. They are very different from hearing instruments, which amplify sound, in that they compensate for damaged or non-working parts of the inner ear. The implant is usually surgically placed under the skin behind the ear. More recently, however, researchers have developed a minimally invasive cochlear implant that avoids the need to create a large scalp earflap. Instead, surgeons make a small "pocket" for the cochlear device. The new, minimally invasive surgery leaves a smaller and less noticeable scar. In addition, decreased tissue trauma allows for programming of the implant sooner after surgery.

Cochlear implants, unlike hearing instruments, are surgically placed behind the ear. Whether a cochlear implant or a hearing instrument is best for you depends on the nature of your hearing loss, your lifestyle, and your personal preferences. We have the expertise and advanced technology to ensure that you get the most thorough hearing evaluation and the right kind of hearing system—one that fits your unique lifestyle. We are here for one simple reason: to help you improve the quality of your hearing and, thus the quality of your life. You'll notice that you're hearing better, not wearing a hearing aid!
