Do your homework before purchasing a spa!

A spa equipped with stairs, a counter and stools for meals.

The market for spas is in full expansion. That's why we find more and more models offering numerous characteristics to respond to the different requirements. Besides the conventional spa, today you can opt for a portable, inflatable thermal tub that plugs into a 110-volt outlet and requires no wiring.

When acquiring a spa for your yard, verify its insulation and its filtration system. Also take into account its comfort and the selection of different positions. In addition, especially if your mobility is somewhat limited, make sure it offers easy access. By estimating the number of people who may potentially use the spa from time to time, you can determine the size and the number of places required. Inform yourself as to the different choices in filtration systems and opt for the one that best suits you. Make sure that the plumbing installation is easily accessible in case of breakage. Ask your supplier if he keeps parts in his inventory and verify the quality of his after-sale service.

If your spa acquisition is motivated primarily for the water therapy it can provide, consider the quantity of jets on the desired model. You can also choose a shape that pleases you: round, square, oval, octagonal, rectangular, etc. Finally, when you have found the model that best suits your needs, you will be able to select the type of lining and the number of lights. Check the thickness of the cover; some covers can be locked. You can install your spa on the terrace, build it into a structure, add some stairs, surround it with a counter and stools for meals, add a parasol to protect you from the sun or the rain, etc.
