No Midlife crisis for The Guild

BY JIM MASON
 Staff Writer

Jon Bouwmeister took up the drums at age nine.

He started his first band three years later.

Several style changes and lineups later, he brings his latest outfit to Crossroads Restaurant in downtown Stouffville tomorrow night.

The Guild takes the stage at 9:30 p.m.

Mr. Bouwmeister, 44, and keyboard player Dave Chester were in The Midlife Crisis Band for seven years. The blues band, popular on the area bar and fundraiser circuit, disbanded after seven years last fall.

The duo put out the word with friends in the business that they were seeking two other players to form a new act.

Enter guitarist Sean Roberts and bassist Steve Steele, both of Ajax, three months ago.

The Guild played its first date two weeks ago in Markham. Gig No. 2 is tomorrow.

"We try to cover all the corners," said Mr. Bouwmeister, a landscape contractor by day.

"We play everything from celtic and blues through rock 'n' roll and hard rock and into rhythm and blues. It's a little bit of everything people ask for."

Expect some four-part harmony.

The band hopes to record in six months. It helps that Mr. Chester owns Chalet Studio, a Claremont-area facility where the likes of Rush and Liona Boyd have worked.

Another fixture on the local music scene, Mr. Chester spent 10 years on the road as a full-time musician before settling into the area.

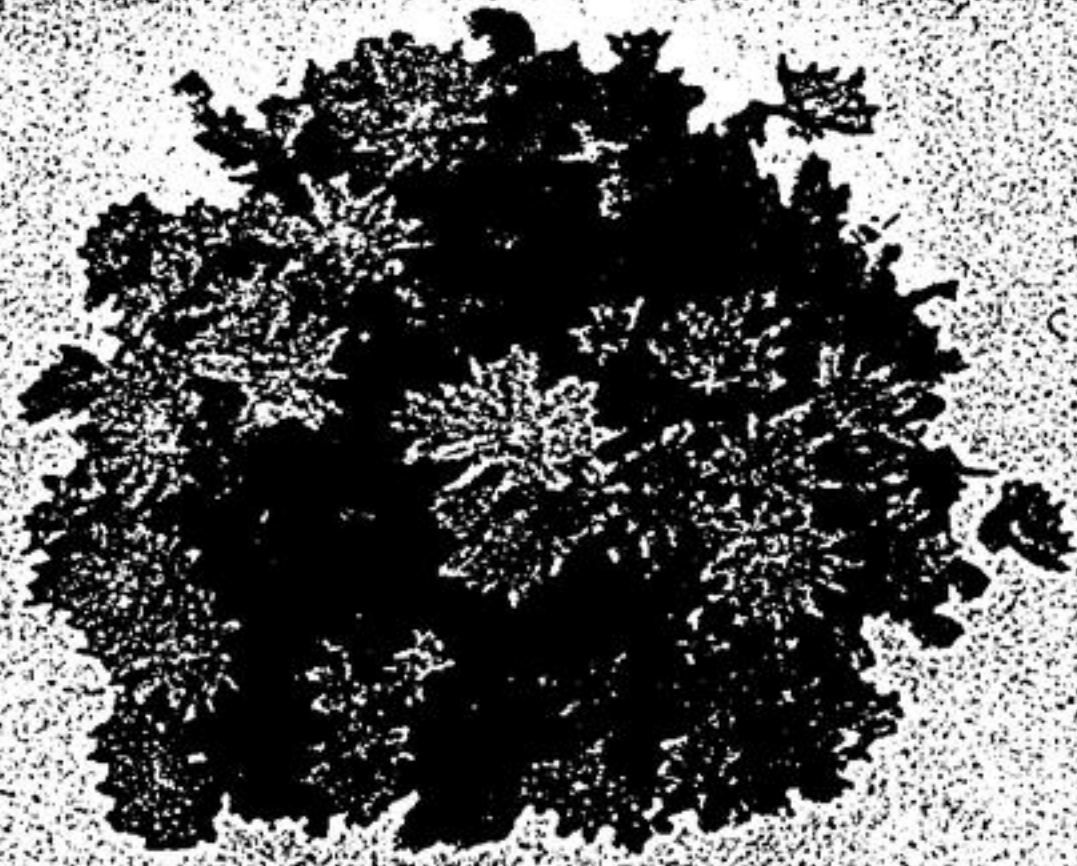

The Guild will play a festival in Claremont June 16.
