The Kia Rondo can be offered with a third row of seats for up to seven passengers and, with the seats folded flat, 2,083 litres of cargo room behind the front seats.

The 2007 Kia Rondo is very pleasant to look at from any angle with large windows and this interesting pale sea foam green paint.

You sit higher than you'd think. The main instruments are in amber on white numbers and the shifter is found sprouting from the mid-dash board. My driving partner and I were in the four-cylinder EX which Kia feels will account for 55 per cent of total Canadian sales.

The seats and interior were trimmed in a light grey cloth and the plastics used show how far Kia has come in just five short years in terms of look, feel and overall quality.

What is probably more impressive is this vehicle is standard with an automatic, that's normally a $1,000 plus option on Rondo's competitors. Yet the Rondo offers this for under $20,000 along with ABS and Traction control included in the sticker price not to mention standard pitch and yaw control which I don't think is even available on its direct competitors.

It's the Power to Surprise that Kia talks about.

And I won't be surprised if this isn't the hottest-selling Kia yet.
