WHAT IS

than the board's code.

Every Realtor is a real estate broker but every broker isn't a Realtor. What is the difference? While both a broker and Realtor are licensed to transact real estate, for instance, only the Realtor is a member of a local real estate board which governs its members with a strict code of rules and ethics. A Realtor can be expelled for failure to obey the board's code and must answer to the board if a complaint is made against him. A standard broker is bound only by government real estate laws. These laws, which govern the Realtor as well, of course, are less strict and more difficult to enforce

· Through his real estate board a Realtor has access to educational courses, seminars. informative current publications, a library, a multiple listing service as well as statistical data on past sales in his area. This last service is a valuable aid in making accurate appraisals. The term Realtor means a STANDARD OF SERVICE which a buyer or seller can rely on - a very important reliance in any property transactions.
