Still going strong after 42 years

By Mark Niblett
MUSSELMAN'S LAKE - Remember the days of the Charleston? Flap-

Prime Minister Bennett?

Remember when 'Ford' and 'V-8' were the same word? Horse-drawn milk wagons?

Cloche hats? Remember those days when you could get into a dancehall for thirty-five cents, or into a movie for a dime?

Those were the early days of the Cedar Beach Park dance pavillion.

It was 1929 that the pavillion first opened, and it struggled on through the 'big band' era of the thirties, the lean war years, the ups and downs of the fifties.

Today it's still going, as strong as ever.

The music these days is straight country and western.

The fashions have changed, but not so much that the patron of 1929 would feel lost. After all, they had short skirts for women and double-breasted coats for men in '29, too.

At times you can almost hear echoes of the past around you: "jive", "swing", "oh you kid", maybe even "beat me, daddy, eight to the bar".

Old dancehalls, they say, never die.

Let's hope not.

Cedar Beach Park 'beauty spot'

By Mark Niblett
MUSSELMAN'S LAKE - The ballroom at Cedar Beach Park has undergone minor changes this year.

According to owner Vern Davies, they involve mainly repairs and fresh paint.

Mr. Davies has added a room downstairs, meant to be used by the teenage children of trailer park campers. The room will provide recreational facilities for young people, featuring such items as ping-pong tables.

When The Tribune visited last week, Vern was in his 'lull-before-the-storm' period.

"It's pretty quiet around here just now," he told us, "most of our staff won't be here for a few days yet."

"The real rush starts when school ends."

While some things may have changed, the important things haven't.

The recreation park is still in immaculate shape. From what we've seen, Cedar Beach must be one of the cleanest parks in Ontario.

There are still plenty of trees, and the grass is well trimmed.

The lake looks as blue and clean as it must have when the park was first opened in 1929.

It's still a quiet place, a place to relax - but maybe we were too early to see the power boats.

Given all this, it's not surprising that people from all over North America visit Cedar Beach Park, many of them coming back year after year.
