

'Sashay' rejects new home

By Jean Leaf
BUTTONVILLE

The moving process still goes on for the Leaf household. On Friday evening, Edgar Fuller and Reg Crawford transported a third contingent of belongings to 61 Wooten Way North, Markham, and other family friends and relatives have been trekking back and forth in their cars with varying loads. Hopefully, it will all be over this weekend and we can light in one place. Last Saturday, 'Sashay' was introduced to her new home. She does not take kindly to innovations and this was no exception. The turquoise plastic clothes basket was lined with her favourite lying-in blanket for the trip so she would know she was still among friends", as Lynda said, but she was not placated. As soon as she saw the shiny cookie-tin which acts as a lid, being hooked in place at the top of the basket she decided not to co-operate. All across No. 7 Highway, she wiggled and gave out eerie cries for help. When we finally arrived and took her into the new house she scrambled under the first bed she could find and there she stayed, still shrieking. She was beguiled out once by the savory smell of vittles laced with salmon juice, but it wasn't until the middle of the night that she really forgave us, visited us, and tried out both our beds. At 6 a.m. she finally settled for Lynda's electric blanket and slept through until 9:30 a.m. Sunday. No one had the heart to tell her that her own bed was waiting in the laundry room.
