"We're stuck for $52,000" - Illingworth

YORK REGION - It was the $52,000 question at a meeting of Regional Council May 18.

A report of the Finance Committee recommended that the Region pay its share of costs for the waterfront redevelopment project on Lake Ontario. York was assessed a total of $259,914.10 by the Metropolitan Toronto and Region Conservation Authority, to be paid in 5 annual installments.

The question had been discussed several times, and members of Council were not too impressed with the demand. At a recent meeting, however, it was revealed that the period for appeal has lapsed; therefore, the first payment of almost $52,000 was included in the 1972 estimates.

(While municipalities have no control over this kind of budgetary action by a Conservation Authority, they have the right to appeal such assessments to the Ontario Municipal Board.)

Aurora Mayor Dick Illingworth led the fight against the committee's recommendation. He has consistently opposed Regional participation in this project.

appeal the assessment for this year," he observed, "but the next council is free to do so. A committee of council should meet with the Authority and the Minister on this whole project."

Mayor Illingworth moved deletion of that clause from the committee's report. Chairman Garfield Wright suggested that removing references to the five-year aspect might be enough, but Mayor Illingworth disagreed.

"We would still be committing ourselves to a total figure of $259,000," he said, "We're stuck for $52,000 this year - let's not make it any worse."

Solicitor Edward Oakes, asked for his opinion, said it would still be possible to appeal. If the OMB turned it down, he said, the matter could go to the Lieutenant-Governor in Council. Markham Mayor Tony Roman saw nothing wrong with Mr. Illingworth's suggestion, but wanted Council to decide what grounds would be cited for an appeal or a submission to the Minister.

After considerable discussion, Councillor Jim Jonegeneel urged members to make their feelings known. "I would like to see council go on record as being opposed to participating in this project," he said, and added, "The solicitor should place our appeal on record as well."

By a vote of 9 to 7, members agreed to instruct Mr. Oakes to lodge an appeal, and authorized the chairman to appoint a committee to discuss the matter at the provincial level.
