given to the top OHA prospect who could be taken in the upcoming NHL entry draft.

In the days leading up to the draft Trivino along with other top prospects expected to be drafted took part in the NHL Combine in Toronto.

Undergoing a series of physical tests and interviews with 26 NHL clubs, Trivino said it went as well as it could.

"The physical testing was hard. At times you felt like a guinea pig with people watching you. It was nerve-racking," he said.

As for the interviews, he noted teams tended to ask generic questions.

"The odd time some questions were kind of weird. But I think the interviews were done so that the teams could get to know you better," he said.

"Overall though, the combine was interesting and I think it went well."

In addition to the combine, Trivino said he and other potential draft picks went to Montreal and had further physical evaluations and interviews with the Canadiens.

As for the upcoming draft, Trivino said he will have close to 10 family members join him in what he hopes will be a memorable day.

'You only get drafted once. This is like a dream come true. I'm sure it'll be a moment to remember. Whatever happens, happens. I just want to live the moment.'

"You only get drafted once. This is like a dream come true. I'm sure it'll be a moment to remember. Whatever happens, happens. I just want to live the moment," he said.

A teammate, James McIntosh, is also ranked. See Page 3 for more on the Stouffville players in the draft.

Only two Spirit players, Kevin Jarman (Columbus) and Mike Sullivan (Los Angeles), have been drafted in the 13-year history of the Jr. A team, both in 2003. Both played their first season of pro hockey last year after four years of NCAA hockey.

Spirit rookie Ethan Werck is highly touted for next year's draft. The Stouffville-area resident will be in Ottawa for this weekend's draft.
