it back its respect," she said.

Mrs. McGill has a special connection with the building. With another resident, she began a petition several years ago to save the building.

"It's a beautiful heritage building. It was glorious in its day and hopefully they can bring it back to that."

The building is slated to be open next spring and, things are right on schedule, according to Mrs. Billich.

"We haven't uncovered any big surprises," she said.

In the coming weeks, the start-up committee will meet again to go over the suggestions and four groups will be formed to begin working on the ideas brought up at the meeting.

Another public meeting will likely follow where people can begin working on implementing ideas in the four categories, Mr. French said.
