Ministry of Environment regulations," according to Mr. Raycroft. "The legislation, with respect to bottled water, doesn't have as much restriction."

According to the Federation of Canadian Municipalities, it takes approximately three litres of water to manufacture a one-litre plastic bottle of water and between 40 to 80 per cent of empty bottles end up as trash or are placed in the garbage, thus in the landfill where they are left to decompose, which takes years.

"Bottles have become a convenience item," Mr. Raycroft said. "Unfortunately, times have changed and people are very concerned with pandemics and water supplies."
