The comforts of the night...

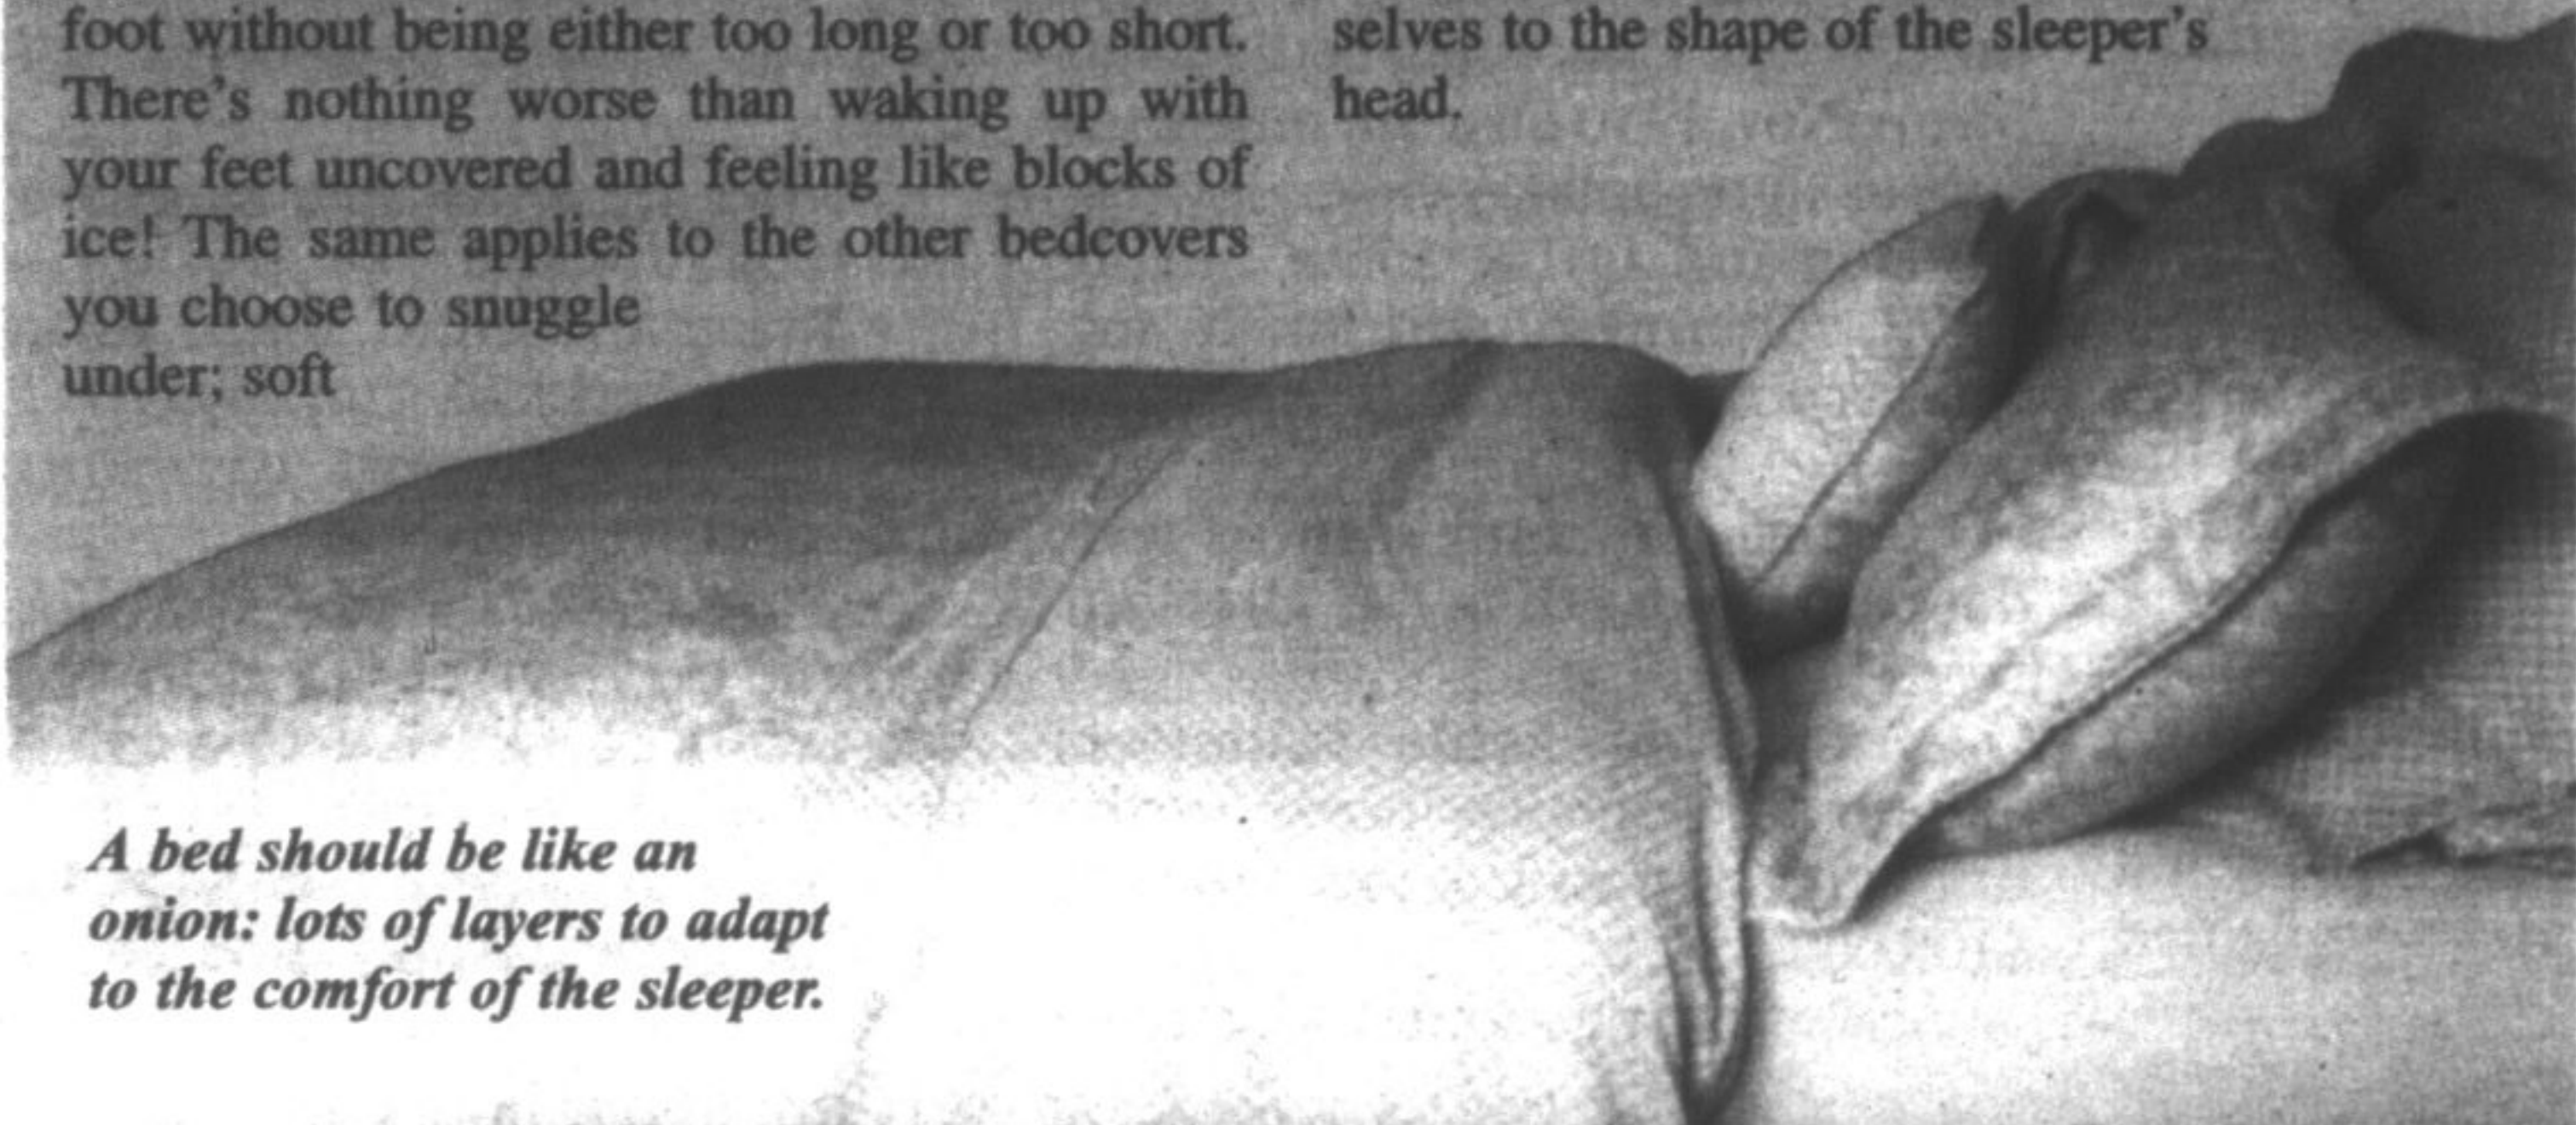

After the heat of the summer, the cooler air of autumn creeping through the open window of the bedroom gives going to bed a whole new meaning. And with it comes an extra need for comfort.

The first item required for making up a comfortable bed is a mattress cover which serves to protect your mattress. This can be accompanied by a mattress topper which provides extra support and comfort. The sheets come next and these should be chosen with care as there's nothing better than slipping between beautiful, soft sheets. Egyptian cotton or flannel? The choice depends on just how warm and cozy you want to be. Or how about the luxury of silk?

The sheets should cover you from head to foot without being either too long or too short. There's nothing worse than waking up with your feet uncovered and feeling like blocks of ice! The same applies to the other bedcovers you choose to snuggle under; soft blankets, fluffy duvets... And, when the cold weather arrives, some people love to slide into previously warmed beds thanks to an electric blanket.

Those who feel the cold should always opt for a duvet. The synthetic duvet made with polyester fibres has the advantage of being allergen free. For a warm, soft effect, silicon fibres are perfect. But if you like natural feathers, you should know that the higher the percentage of down, the lighter the duvet will be. The ideal is 70% down and 30% duck or goose feathers. Lastly, the pillow is as much to do with comfort as with the decor of the bedroom. Piles of colourful pillows add a final touch to any bed. And as for comfort, everyone has their own idea of what type of pillow is the right one. Some pillows will even mould themselves to the shape of the sleeper's head.

A bed should be like an onion: lots of layers to adapt to the comfort of the sleeper.
