Bamboo floors

Bamboo and cork have become the stars of the flooring market. These eco-friendly materials are prized by home owners who are concerned about the environment and who appreciate the unique look of natural flooring.

Resistant
Bamboo is as tough as nails and has a smooth, satiny finish. Bamboo floors are ecological in that they are made from plants that grow and regenerate eight times faster than hardwood. Listed as an invasive species in most areas, the use of bamboo in home renovations does not have the slightest destructive impact on the environment or on agricultural crops.

The bamboo used in flooring comes from mature plants that are about five years old, the age by which they have become hard and resistant to damage. Bamboo wood is surprisingly stable: 2.5 times more so than a traditional floor. It does not expand and contract with variations in humidity levels, as does a wood such as maple. That makes bamboo flooring ideal for our changeable northern climate. Moreover, bamboo is 33 percent more resistant to developing bumps and cracks compared with white oak.

Comfortable and hypoallergenic
Cork flooring is as resistant as bamboo and is naturally resistant to shocks, stains, and the sun. Composed of millions of cells filled with air, cork is both insulating and comfortable to walk on. It is also appreciated for its ability to absorb noise and vibration and for its hypoallergenic qualities. It is, however, very sensitive to humidity. Flooring stores offer cork tiles in many different colours and finishes and can contribute to a warm, cozy home décor.
