

Musician comes out of her shell

BY SANDRA BOLAN

Megan Fitchett is not your typical rock band lead guitarist, reveling in the spotlight of every solo.

She was so painfully shy that when her band Done with Dolls performed, "I didn't move on stage at all. I was a statue and I knew this wasn't going to work at all for very long. ... I'm not afraid of going on stage, but it's my form of stage fright."

The Scarborough resident knew her shyness was affecting her relationship with the band and its progress. She looked for a music school that would help transform her from a 15-year-old demure guitar player into an unreserved thrasher. She found Stouffville's We Rock School of Music.

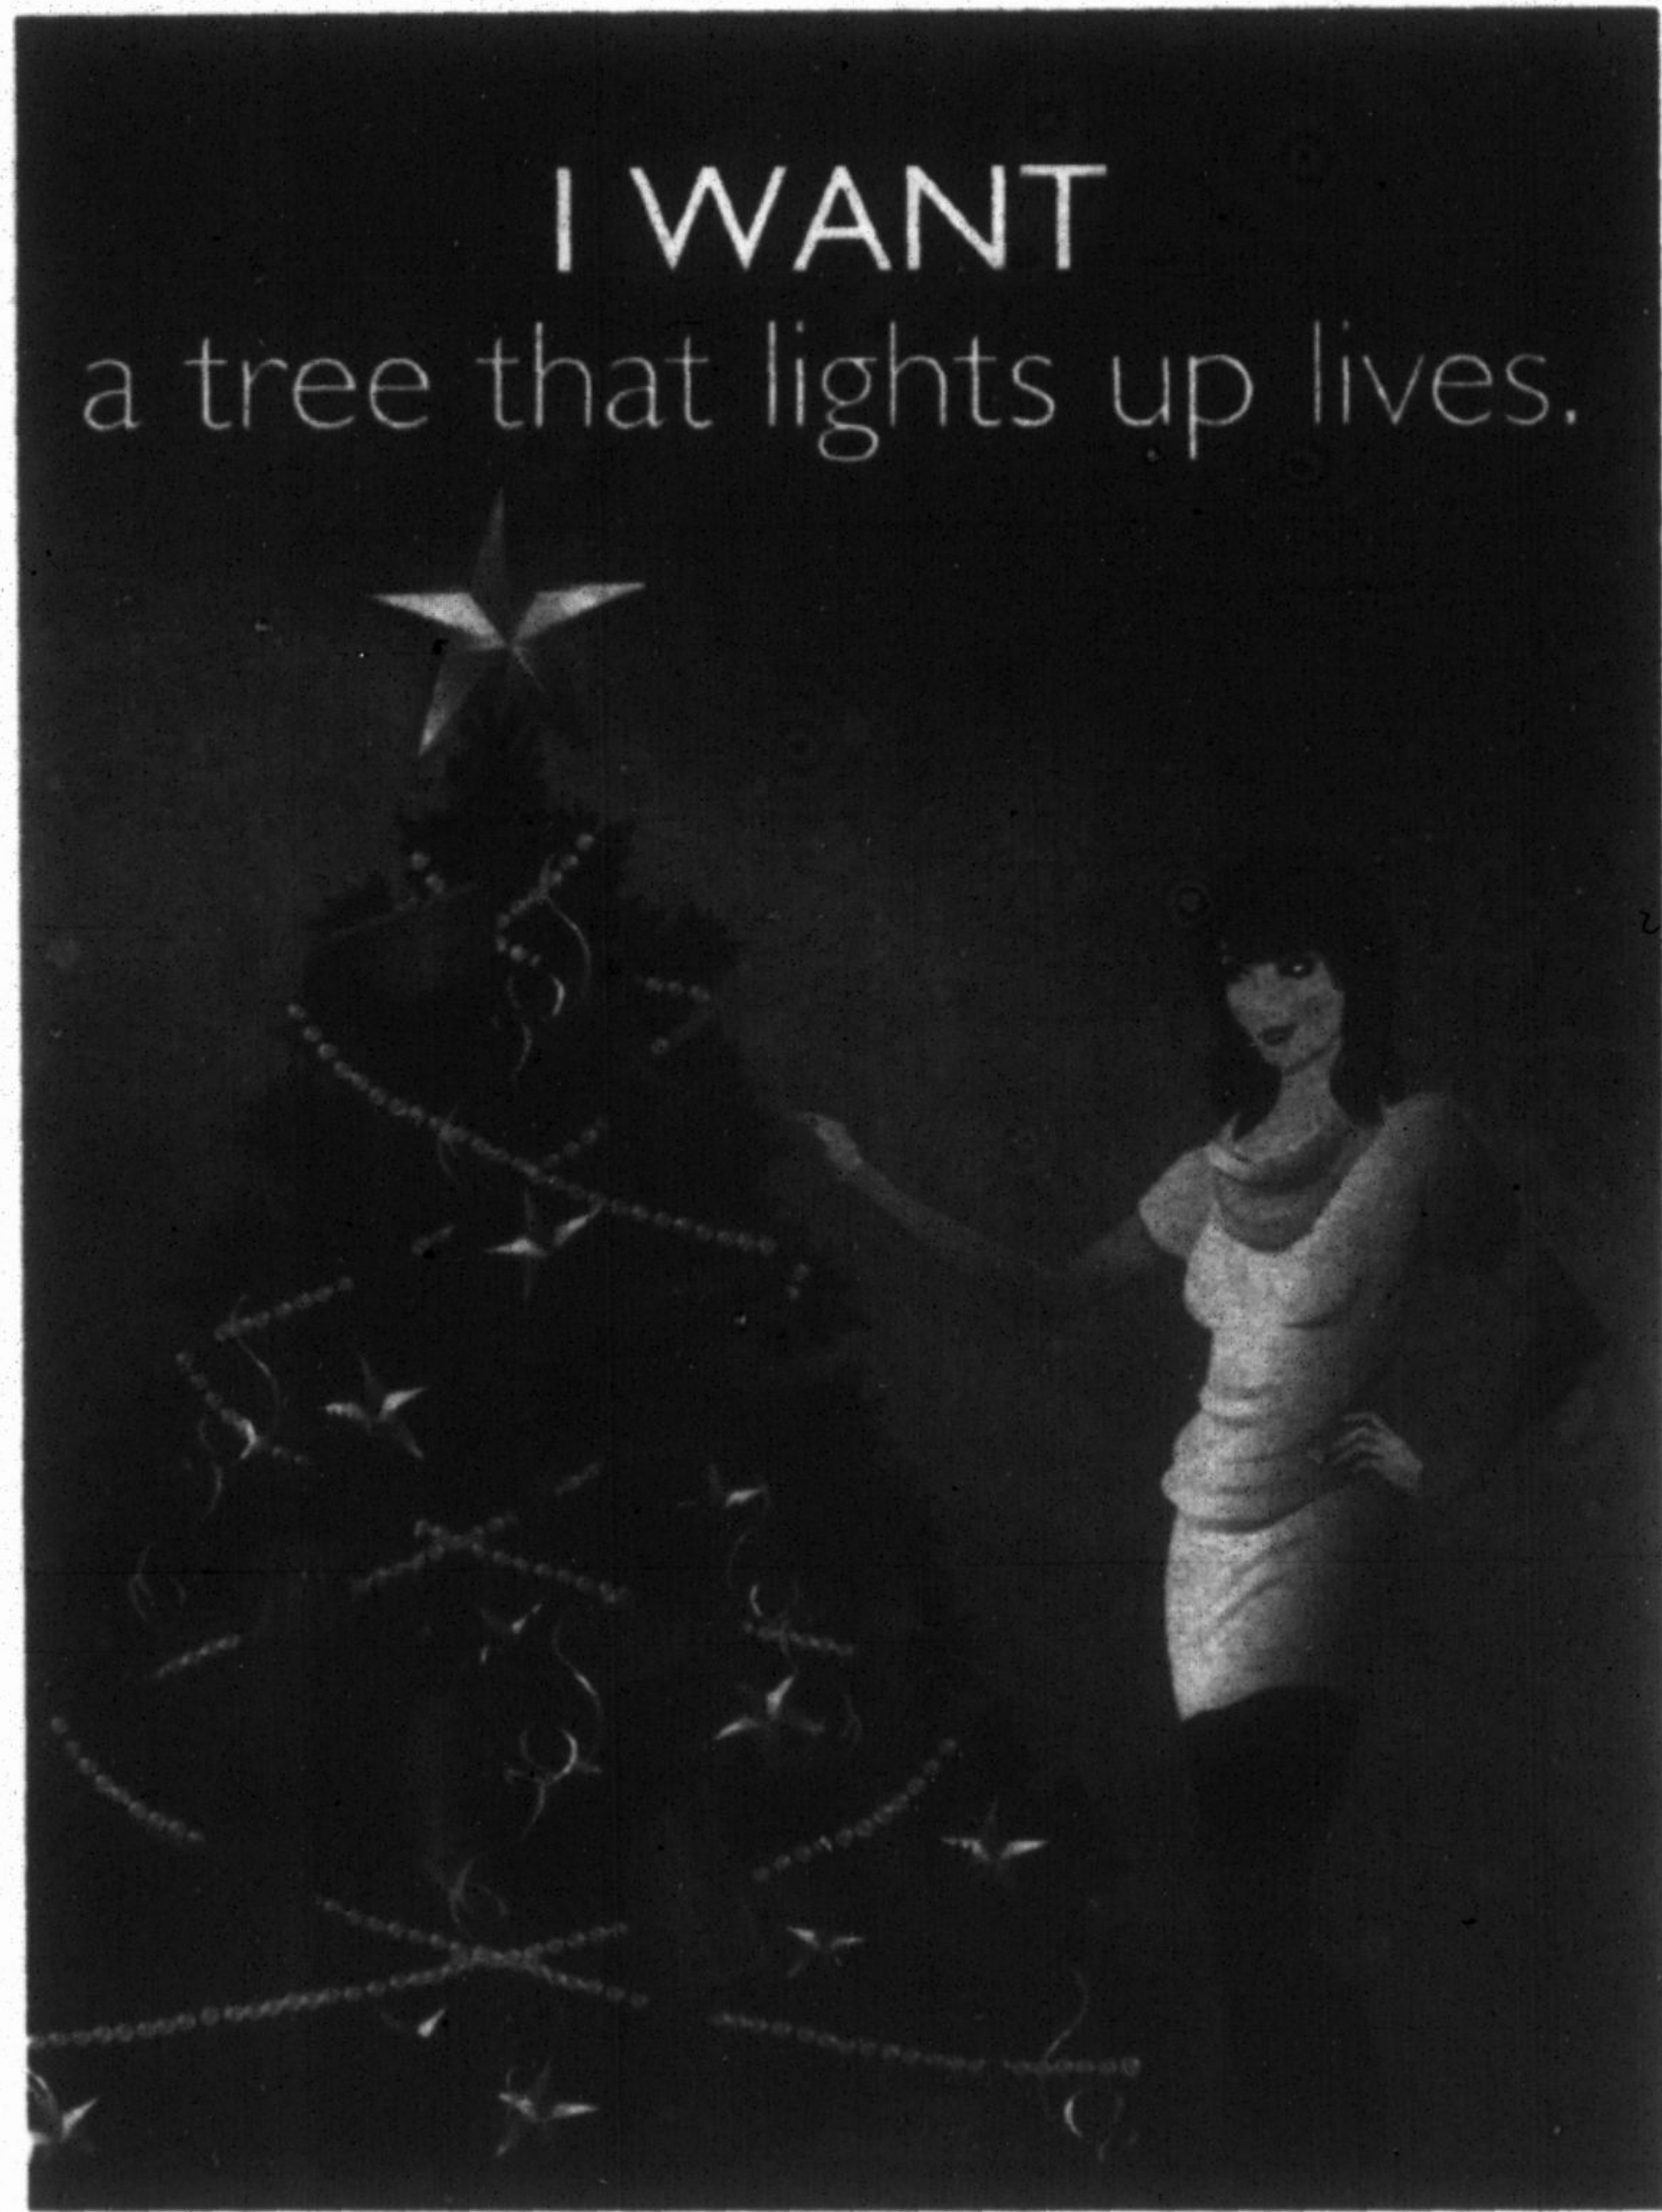

"In 10 months (she has a) healthy feeling about herself and performing. So much so, she can go right into the audience or go right to the front of the stage for her guitar solos," We Rock School of Music president Jim McMillan said.

Mr. McMillan said, not only does he work with Ms Fitchett on her guitar licks during their one-hour sessions Saturday afternoons, but they also hone her stage presence.

"Most music schools don't do this kind of approach," he said.

We Rock School of Music plans to host a concert with Done with Dolls. No date has been announced.
