If it's not based on science, it's hogwash. For many decades, that has been the mainstream attitude toward holistic or alternative medicine.

But as more people search out alternative remedies to cure their ailments without medications created in labs, holistic medicine has moved from the backrooms of Chinatown shops to front and centre Main Street Stouffville.

The second annual Health and Wellness Show — Fifty Shades of Wellness — takes place Jan. 19 at the Lebovic Centre for Arts and Entertainment - Nineteen on the Park.

The show, which is geared to people of all ages, is about taking a proactive approach to one's health and unpeeling the onion, according to Suze loyce, event co-ordinator and owner of The Hearty Artichoke.

It's not a Band-Aid approach to health, but uncovering the root cause for that fever or re-occurring side pain, she said of holistic medicine.

J. H. George Hildebrandt, otherwise known as Maca George, is the show's keynote speaker. He takes to the stage at 11 a.m.

Mr. Hildebrandt and his wife Leonor run Woodbridge's Remedies Clinic and Health
