Native New Yorker bringing message to music showcase

Stouffville's Tom Pullin, U-Decide, Bruce MacNeil, Marion Drexler and Mary Ann DeLorey are just some of the singer/songwriters performing at this year's Local Artist Showcase.

It is the second annual such event, which takes place April 12 at the Lebovic Centre for Arts and Entertainment - Nineteen on the Park.

"I'm very honoured," said Ms DeLorey, who performed in the inaugural showcase.

A classical guitarist and teacher, the New York City transplant is hoping to use the showcase as a venue to stress the importance of music education within the school system.

"(I) would love to see more of it here in Stouffville," she said.

"In participating in a music band or orchestra program, a child's mind must work itself in a broad aural view in regards to working with a group of people in order to create a music piece for performance," she said, adding music enhances children's math skills and provides an alternate way of speaking.

Ms DeLorey started studying classical guitar at 16 with Edward Brown, a professor at Wagner and Staten Island colleges who founded The Music for Olde Staten Island.

Also on the bill is Chris Moroz, principal singer/songwriter for Zealand; the duo Seventeen and Change; Joe D'Angelo, guitarist for the Toronto metal band The Blackcloud Syndicate; and The Fridge Magnets, which is Rick Levine and Mark Freedman.

"The musicians are very good and high quality," Ms DeLorey said.

Tickets are $20 each, $10 for students and available at <http://nineteenonthepark.com/>. The show starts at 8 p.m.
